London y<sup>e</sup> 28 of y<sup>e</sup> 12 mo: 49

my verie dear and loving friend in the blessed ioynt of life and yeare, that endureth over toll and death, and all its misfortunes, in that life and yeare and good of Righteousnes, that the gates of hell cannot prevail against, in this my low waite vnto thee, and in the presence of eternall glory I devoutly salute thee, and embrace thee, as a souldier of the Lamb, standing in the gaze, and making warre in Righteousnes, who the Lord will overcome, with eternall glory, will delight I verie much thinke, in which thou hast merited of thy sufferings and all so of thy sorowes, at which my life serving, and my soule, did rejoice, will deare Lamb, the god of my life, I vnto thee in thy testimony, my deare love is to thy wife, and thy little babes, thy father and mother, with thine familie and all friends as thou remembers, the love of my god, in my heart, flows vnto you all, I may yet see in town a wife or son daye, and <sup>thou</sup> goe downe towards Dorchester, and will so thinke, I would a good souldier, but for few friends are in town, I cannot well leave it, thou hast merited of the father coming, by but no more, I hope to have his company, after the yearly meeting, to Lambeth, your small Babe is taken with the tukes, and three of his souldiers, wth many other friends, I have no more but remaine thy friend and Bro:

Roger Longworth

Gods most loving alme or two
