my verie dear and loving friend in the blessed ioynt of life and yeare, that Redime our hell and death, and all its miserments, in that life and yeare and good of Righteousnes, that the gates of hell cannot prevail against, in this my low waite vnto thee, and in the presence of eternall yeare I devoutly salute thee, and embrace thee, as a soulder of the Lamb, standing in the gaze, and making warre in righteousness, vnto the Lord with evermore, with eternall glory, will dea heart I remember thee, in which thou gane me account of thy sufferings and all so of thy sorowes, at which my life spring, and my soule, did vrayse, will deare Lamb, the god of my life, I vnto thee in thy testimony, my deare soule is to thy wife, and thy little babes, thy father and mother, with their familie and all friends as thou remembers, the Lord of my god, in my heart, flows vnto you all, I may yet see in town a wife or son daye, and ^{then} goe downe towards Safford, and will soe, I would a good soulder, but for few friends are in town, I cannot well leave it, thou gane me account of the father coming, by but no more, I hope to have his company, after the yearly meeting, to Samastin, your small Babie is taken with the tukes, and three of his soulders, wth more other friends, I have no more but remaine thy friend and Bro:
