J. H.

I draw friend and well beloved in the Lords grace shons much I often remember thee, and often desires to draw from thee, for that ancient love and unity follows through me at this time as at many other times, and in the arms of our changeable, and everlasting Lord of god I draw by salute thee, with thy dear wife, I draw friend you are ever near, and I draw unto I cannot express, what is in my heart, towards you but you can read me to hand words or you by this thou ^{may} understand I write to thee, from Harrowick as soon as I was landed which is days ago, I desired a few lines from thee I have found a writer in the Citty, I all so desired a bill who I might find find found I thought it might misarry I hope this will come to thy hand, Susanna milner desired a letter from thee, concerning will. you will she hath not answered, and I desire me to give thee account, will. you will not go to Confilman, he is about Brighthelm, there is a ship going from thence, with many good passengers, she remembers her love to thee - this day. J. H. is gone out of town there is few friends in town, she hath lately chosen a maid that will not give satisfaction to the people, for with my love to thy family son and daughter and all friends as thou remember, I rest thy friend and Bro.
according to measure Roger Longworth
