Critchfield to Leave Rollins

Dr. Jack B. Critchfield

Zoning Ordinance May Become Issue

Last May, the Winter Park City Commission considered a zoning ordinance which would have banned Rollins students from renting homes in Winter Park. The proposed ordinance, which was tabled after much controversy, would have redefined the term "family" in the zoning codes. Complaints of unruly behavior of Rollins students residing on Phelps Avenue precipitated the action.

Dr. Fred Hicks, Executive Assistant to the President, attended many of the hearings and subsequent meetings. On Thursday, September 22, Wanda Russell called a meeting of students who are currently living off-campus in order to give Dr. Hicks an opportunity to discuss the issue and update the developments. Dr. Hicks revealed that if there was a repetition of last year's incidents, the zoning change could become an issue in the city-wide municipal elections to be held in December. Two city commission seats will be vacant at this time.

A poor turn out at this meeting did not deter Hicks from stressing the point that rowdy behavior by Rollins students could stir up old feelings once again. Bob Walker, a student directly involved in last year's incident, blamed apathy for the lack of interest in the meeting. This apathy seems uncalled for considering that such an ordinance could have affected 50 to 60 students, and at least 2,000 residents of Winter Park.

The two commission seats which will be open are currently held by Jerome J. Donnelly, an FTU professor, and Richard W. Stevens. Stevens voted for the ban in the first and second readings of the ordinance.

Helter Skelter Author Speaking At Fieldhouse On Sunday

Helter Skelter.

According to the Funk and Wagnall Dictionary this phrase means "in a hurried and confused manner." But in 1969, Helter Skelter took on a whole new connotation due to the acts of Charles Manson.

Helter Skelter lives on through the work of Vincent Bugliosi, Chief Prosecutor of the Tate-LaBianca murder trial, who co-authored the chronology of Manson and his followers entitled - what else - Helter Skelter.

What bizarre philosophy caused Manson to attempt a black-white Armageddon? What strange power did he have over his "family" that caused them to incriminate themselves, mutilate their faces and even murder for him? What legalities were involved in putting this self-acclaimed Messiah behind bars?

Bugliosi will answer these and other questions at 8 p.m. Sunday, October 9, in the Fieldhouse under the sponsorship of the Student Center Educational Lectures Committee.

Dr. Jack Critchfield announced his resignation to a room full of faculty, staff and students on Wednesday, September 30 in Crummer Auditorium.

Dr. Critchfield came to Rollins from the University of Pittsburgh where he served as Assistant Chancellor of Student Affairs and Associate Professor of Higher Education.

His eight years at Rollins have been productive ones but his resignation comes as no surprise since Critchfield stated when he became president that he would limit his stay to a minimum of eight years and a maximum of ten years. He is now in his ninth year as president of Rollins.

"If you stay too long you lose your ability to inspire and I'm starting to see signs of ineffectiveness," the native of Pennsylvania said.

And so, about a year ago, Critchfield decided it was time for a change. After 21 years in education - both administrative and instructional - becoming President of the Winter Park Telephone Company will provide the needed change.

He cites one of the main reasons for leaving as his lack of desire to be a full-time fund raiser. "Fund raising is part of the job (as President of Rollins), but it shouldn't become the job itself," Critchfield said.

After becoming well settled at Rollins and established in the community, it was a tough decision to resign. Being the top administrator of a small college provides much security and a comfortable lifestyle, Critchfield said. But he does not want to become too secure and comfortable in his position.

When Critchfield was offered the position at the telephone company he considered it "the right size of opportunity for an administrator to get out in the business world without falling on his head." His five-and-a-half years on the Winter Park Telephone Company Board plus his numerous years of experience as an administrator should prevent that from happening.

But, he admits, he will miss getting to know the incoming freshman and watching the culmination of four years work when they graduate. "That (graduation) was the most satisfying part of my job," Critchfield said.

The graduate of the University of Pennsylvania will continue to attend sports events, theater productions and chapel services at the college, but he is adamant in his intent to become divorced completely from administration at Rollins. "The worst injustice I could do to this college would be to allow myself to be a pain in the neck to my successor."

Meanwhile, a committee will be formed to begin the process of reviewing applications and interviewing possible candidates for the vacant position. Dr. Critchfield has requested that he remain detached from any involvement in the selection of the new President.

a sneak preview of Bugliosi in action - on the tennis courts not the legal courts - he will be challenging Ed Lake, Rollins' tennis player at 11 a.m. Saturday, in an effort to recapture the time when he was the top player at the University of Miami.

Vincent Bugliosi, Co-Author of HELTER SKELTER

After interviewing, investigating and practically living with the "family" for two years as he prepared his case, Bugliosi gained insight into the core of "Manson mentality."

Examining the philosophy and underlying motives of Manson and his followers will be part of Bugliosi's talk as well as centering around the legalities involved in the trial and the continuing legal battle that has ensued.

One of the reasons Bugliosi takes the time from his private law practice in Los Angeles to lecture at colleges, universities and other groups around the nation is that Charles Manson will be eligible for parole in 1978.

Is there any possibility Manson could join the ranks of free society in the near future? Your chance to hear Vincent Bugliosi's explanation is at 8 p.m. Sunday, October 9. Admission will be free to Rollins students, $1 for other students with identification, and $2 for the community.

Critchfield: Educator, Administrator, Fund Raise

The resignation of a Rollins College President is, by no means, a frequent occurrence. Prior to Dr. Critchfield's announcement of his intention to leave, Rollins had had only two chief executives in the last forty-five years.

Nevertheless, Jack Critchfield's comparatively short reign as president need not be summarized in terms of growth in student enrollment nor buildings erected under his administration. Rather, the Rollins College of the past eight years can best be characterized in terms of non-material accomplishments; by examining the improved quality of students and faculty who have come to this campus, by acknowledging the increased prestige that the Rollins' reputation enjoys in educational circles, and perhaps most important of all, by appreciating an era which has seen vast and much needed development of the academic and educational process at Rollins.

Although President Critchfield was not solely responsible for these dramatic improvements, it was his guidance and leadership that provided others with the courage and confidence necessary to accomplish these goals. Goals which, at the outset, seemed hopeless and idealistic to some, but to Jack Critchfield, they became attainable objectives to which he committed eight years of his life.

One personal goal that Dr. Critchfield accomplished was the securing of state funds enabling Florida students to attend universities or colleges of their choice. The long range objective of this bill was to provide native Floridians with additional monetary aid in an effort to make private institutions financially more appealing. Dr. Critchfield authored the original legislation which was subsequently endorsed by both houses of the State Legislature in April of 1972.

President Critchfield pointed out that not only has this act meant a noticeable improvement in the number of qualified Florida students attending Rollins, but "all of prime, higher education has benefitted from it." Aside from these institutional beneficiaries, many students who would have otherwise been unable to obtain a college degree have now been able to under the provisions of this important legislation.

An important aspect of the College that has been strengthened under Dr. Critchfield's administration is the role that both students and faculty play in the formulation of college policies. Upon his arrival at Rollins, near the close of the tumultuous sixties, the new President was confronted with the task of integrating faculty and student opinions on administrative matters. Dr. Critchfield stated that, at this particular time, there was a "desperate need on behalf of the faculty to participate in the direction of the college, not administrate, but help establish policy." His efforts, combined with those of fellow administrators and faculty members resulted in what has now evolved into the College Senate.

In relating some of his personal observations and feelings about Rollins specifically and students in general, Dr. Critchfield touched upon problems of major significance during his presidency. The primary ones being student apathy and Rollins' reputation for being a school which fosters students possessing only a pocket dictionary and a surfboard.

Student apathy, strangely enough, was a problem during the sixties in the eyes of Dr. Critchfield. Coming from the "battleground" of the University of Pennsylvania, President Critchfield realized that only a small minority of students were actually involved in the organization of demonstrations. He found this to be the case at Rollins. What Rollins' students did share with their peers elsewhere, however, was a lack of enthusiasm to participate in co-curricular activities and "very little academic motivation."

After eight years of wrestling with this problem, although it has not yet been totally resolved, President Critchfield believes "the change has been like day and night in terms of progress made." He cites, as a major reason for this, the fact that jobs in society have become scarce, thus forcing students to adopt a competitive attitude in preparing for the future.

The reputation of Rollins, an issue of great concern for all who are affiliated with the college, has been one of equal magnitude to Dr. Critchfield these past eight years. While emphasizing that time is a necessary ingredient for altering any institution's reputation, the President stated that he "has confidence that this institution can do it." To a great extent, the process has begun and has endured with considerable progress.

Offering some insight into the transformation, Dr. Critchfield cited the careful scrutiny and selective process for choosing new students as being one step in a positive direction. As an example, the President seriously doubted whether or not even twenty-five percent of the Freshmen class eight years ago would now be accepted under the present, upgraded admission standards.

These higher standards and academic requirements have benefitted the college immeasurably in terms of its eligibility to receive grants from the foundations. In two words, the foundations' perceptions of Rollins have "changed dramatically" in the last eight years. Somewhat regrettably, the President announced a failure to "break the ice with the major foundations such as Ford and Carnegie," but added that a representative Rollins College can now walk in these offices and receive a fair hearing.

Indeed, Dr. Critchfield has been an excellent fund raiser for Rollins, securing hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to balance the College's budget. He has objectified his administration with the construction of several buildings on campus and contributed much to the physical improvement of this community, but Jack Critchfield's intangible achievements at Rollins, Florida, and in the field of education distinguish him as these accomplishments will provide inspiration for the continued betterment of Rollins College.

Peer Counseling Now Available To All Rollins Students

Beginning Monday, October 10, a new peer counseling service will be made available to all Rollins students. Anyone having any sort of problem or questions they would like to ask are encouraged to drop by the office and talk with one of the peer counselors. All of the counselors are Rollins' students who have been around for two or three years, and they are prepared to help answer any questions you might have. If you're hesitant to speak with your advisor or professor about it, we'd like to try to help. If you want to change your advisor, talk about winter term registration, discuss problems concerning your course and so on, stop by the Peer Counseling Office any day Monday through Thursday, from 1:00 to 5:00 in the afternoon. The office is located in the front of the Student Union, near the stage. Anything we discuss will be kept confidential - this service was developed by students, and it is for the benefit of all Rollins students, so don't hesitate to stop by the office or call us at extension 2361.

Chapel Service Sunday

The stories of Samson as prankster and brawler, will be read and considered at Chapel, Sunday at 9:45 a.m. The account is in Judges 15. Dean Wettstein will speak on "Reading the Golden Rule Backwards." The Chapel Choir will sing: Gloria in Excelsis Deo by Poulenc.

On Sunday, October 16 at 9:45 p.m., Dean Wettstein will deal with the final story in the Samson cycle, when he is blinded and bound but not overcome. Tracy Scott will sing: How Willing My Paternal Love from Handel's Samson. The Choir will present Laudamus Te by Poulenc.

Student Assembly Minutes

Sept. 29, 1977

Carter Beese, the Student Association President welcomed all new members of the Assembly and encouraged them all to read up on the R-Book, which really states what the Assembly is all about. The Student Government has about $95,000 to work with this year. The Student Assembly is not yet complete, the Day Student elections will be held and some of the standing committees have openings and other campus committees.

Bob Ourisman, I.F.C. President announced that RUSH will be from Nov. 4-19 and gave some insight on the I.F.C. rules and regulations.

A motion was approved to allocate $20.00 to each of the 46 students in Australia and the 17 students in Ireland who're participating in the Overseas Program.

There are (1) position opened on the College Life Committee,

(1) on the Professional Development Committee, (3) on the Housing Review Board Committee, and (3) on the Publications Union. A motion to nominate Dr. Fred Hicks and Carter Beese to the College Life Committee was tabled until the next meeting of the Assembly.

Johnnie Williams was elected to serve as the Student Association representative to the Student Center of BOD.

"Who's Who" Nomination Forms Now Available

Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities - All seniors are eligible to nominate candidates for Who's Who. If you are a senior and did not receive a nomination blank, please pick one up in the Office of Student Affairs. Dr. Billy O. Wireman
Dean of Crummer School

The September 26, 1977, edition of The Chronicle of Higher Education carried the following question as a headline, "How Do College Students and Other Adults Learn?" A sub-headline went on to say, "We don't know, and that is a major failing of educational research."

This rather startling finding of a national "Committee on Fundamental Research Relevant to Education" gets at the tap root of the major problem facing American higher education. Colleges and universities are, first and foremost, learning communities, and if we do not know how college students and adults learn, then the serious question has to be asked, "How can we set forth a compelling rationale for the academy as a learning community to an increasingly skeptical and often hostile public?" The findings of the report, sadly, are probably true. If you have read any of my writings you know that I have long felt that the greatest deficiency in education, at all levels in America, is a lack of philosophic clarity and precision; a stubborn unwillingness, or perhaps a tragic inability, of educators to set forth in simple, clear, explicit terms what it is that we want students to learn. In short, we educators simply have not conceptualized the fundamental instincts and rationale for the academic enterprise.

It is against this backdrop that I quote from an "educational hypothesis" which I formulated several years ago. This statement represents the ends which liberal learning should seek. It reads as follows:

The Academy is a learning community committed to a learning society.

Its principal business being learning, the Academy seeks primarily but not exclusively through the life of the mind, to liberate human beings into an authentic and effective personhood by engaging them in a lifelong learning experience characterized by rigor, flexibility, and a concern for humanistic, democratic, and moral values.

Authenticity implies identity, genuineness, integrity, self-respect, honesty, and the capacity to care. Effectiveness means more than competence.

Inherent in effectiveness is knowing how to learn, to do, to manage, to execute - in short, to be.

The skills necessary to maintain oneself in a lifelong learning experience are found in the mutual interaction and relative dominance of four basic learning units: learning to learn, learning to do, learning to care, and learning to be.

The nature of my work over the past 21 years in higher education has taken me into the inner dynamics of many sub-cultures: parents, students, religion, government, politics, business, academics, and international affairs. I can say to you without any reservation that there is much confusion and frustration in the public mind about the fundamental purposes of the academy. This is especially true for the concept of liberal education. For those colleges and universities which put together cohesive and coherent academic programs that reflect the above definition of liberal education, this confusion and frustration represents a rich opportunity.

Whether it be in economics, philosophy, business administration, theatre, zoology, calculus, history, or what have you, the primary purpose of the university is to develop intellectual and moral leadership; to fashion the mind and values of the age. Wedding this intellectual and moral leadership to professional and vocational competence devoted to ethical and humane ends is surely the number one item on the human and academic agenda. Our efforts should center in developing in students the capacity to stay in a lifelong learning process. Who can deny that there is joy and mystery in discovery and learning. John Stuart Mill called this process "individual spontaneity."

Colleges and universities which bring these basic truths alive in the minds and hearts of students through creative teaching are in a very strong position to respond competently and imaginatively to the rocky days ahead in American higher education. Those institutions, on the other hand, that drift mindlessly and appeal to nostalgia will, almost surely, fall by the wayside.

This is as it should be.

Security Apprehends Obscene Caller

This week, after receiving several obscene phone calls, a Rollins sophomore reported the incident to Campus Safety - The officer on duty was Terri Hornyak.

When the obscene caller suggested a meeting with the Rollins co-ed, Officer Hornyak told her to agree and to set up a meeting place. However, Officer Terri Hornyak substituted for the girl by exchanging clothes with the student and walking to the agreed upon meeting place at the corner of Fairbanks and Park Avenue.

"Normally" said Officer Hornyak, "Our jurisdiction extends to Fairbanks and Park, however, I felt it was a good idea to call in the Winter Park Police Department to back us up on the occasion." And so, when Terry Hornyak waited for the caller to arrive Winter Park Policemen were parked nearby in an unmarked car.

When the caller arrived Terri got in the car. After a few minutes she asked the man to take her back to campus. He agreed and started back towards Rollins. After dropping Terri off at Holt Avenue the Winter Park Police Department apprehended the suspect a block away.

Upon questioning it was discovered that the obscene phone caller was released by the Navy with a sexual deviant card. He was also at one time held by the Orlando Police Department.

Quick thinking and decisive action on the part of Officer Hornyak prevented what could have been a dangerous situation for the Rollins co-ed.

Unfortunately many girls who receive obscene phone calls never take them seriously and fail to report them to campus safety. If you should be confronted by a similar situation report it immediately. You may not be as lucky as one Rollins co-ed.

Local Shops Appraised

by Karen Krevitz and Susie Alter

Being freshman fashion freaks, we decided to explore Winter Park Shops and see what they had to offer.

Heading North on Park Ave. we ran across a unique little boutique called Obliviation IV, located between Fairbanks and Comstock Ave. This store carries the discotheque type of clothing for men and women. It always has a sale to offer and for those of you who want a real bargain - men's and ladies shirts as well as halters are now on sale. They also have a large supply of pants such as Khaki's, cords, and light weights. They carry a year round stock of swim suits for the bathing beauty. They also have a selection of clogs, imitation Dr. Scholl's and slaps. For those of you who can't put up with the hard, springless mattresses of Rollins, this quaint little store also offers waterbeds from single to kingsize. Obliviation IV is open

Songwriters Guild Offers Opportunity

Songwriters Guild, a club for amateur songwriters, poets, lyric writers and sometimes singers and musicians, is seeking volunteers with a knowledge of writing a manuscript to give instruction to Guild members.

Meetings are once a month, the first Monday evening at 7:30 p.m. at First Federal Bank at 2424 Edgewater Dr. in the College Park area of Orlando. The Guild will pay for gas and provide refreshments.

Interested individuals should call Mrs. Montouri at 898-7557 to make arrangements.

Information regarding other volunteer opportunities in the community are available in the Office of Student Affairs and the Personal Development Center (French House).

from 11-5 everyday except Sunday.

First One in Ltd., located at 112 Park Ave. South, comes highly recommended. The other is a Rollins enthusiast, as is evident by her display of Rollins' tennis photos in the front of the store.

First one in Ltd. carries everything for tennis and golf - and even the new craze darts. Included in their inventory are such brand names as; White Line, Slazenger, Modessa, and Izod. Besides offering warm-up jackets, tennis shirts and shorts, they include custom made jewelry, cards, and posters in their selection. For one month, womens' Modessa clothing is being sold at 50% off regular price.

Tennis raquets are restrung for Rollins' students at 10% off - 15% for team members.

For those of you interested in improving your golf game, they sell custom made golf clubs which are handmade here in Winter Park.

The Orange Lion Boutique, located on Park Ave. between Lyman and New England, offers the casual or dressy look for the stylish girl. This store not only has the latest fashions but is constantly receiving new shipments of clothes. They have a backroom which is always filled with sale items such as jumpsuits, bathingsuits, sweaters, T-shirts, and anything else you can imagine. For girls who are planning to be asked to one of the various formals held at Rollins, they carry a wide selection of long dresses (even the slinky look!). They have bathingsuits all year round and have just gotten in the new Brazilian cut. For those of you who are dying to know what it looks like come in and check it out - believe us, this is guaranteed to attract any man's attention. The Orange Lion is open from 11-5, and on Thursday till 9:00.

"NUNsense": Student Reflects on Rollins

by: Sister Kate

Having been a member of the Rollins Family for several years, I find myself wondering about so many graduates who shared their pains and joys with me during their college days. Often, they spoke out strongly on issues, policies, and the general atmosphere at Rollins. Typically, students would stop by my apartment at McKean Hall and greet me with, "Ya know what's wrong with this place?" It was rarely a question. Being an incurable optimist, I tend to want to know what is RIGHT about things. So, we would tackle the 'statement' and, hours later (in-between meat loaf sandwiches and ping pong) we had catalogued ALL the answers! But, were they the answers?

This column was begun with the thought that sometimes, when we distance ourselves from surroundings-persons, places, and things - we often view them from a different perspective. My curiosity leads me to ask, "Do they feel the same way now?" NUNsense is interviewing graduates for the purpose of sharing the many memories they have taken with them - memories they can now hold at arm's length.

Fred Lauten graduated in 1975. He was a History major; President of the Student Association in his junior year. Drafted the Bill of Students' Rights, Responsibilities and Conduct; RA sophomore year; Resident Head (Elizabeth) senior and Crummer year; Algernon Sidney Sullivan Scholar; MBA in '76; Supported proposal for Athletic Scholarships Based on Need and Preferential Housing Proposal, to mention a few. Presently, he is a second-year law student at the Villanova Law School in Philadelphia. He responds: "I have been asked to comment on what I feel are the pro's and con's of my experience at Rollins College.

Though I doubt a college could gather a more significantly improved faculty or administration than Rollins, I do feel the students could have been more academically elevated.

If I had the power to change any aspect of Rollins College, I would attempt to instill in the student body a desire for excellence in intellectual achievement. This would involve a more rigorous approach to academic pursuit and would call for higher expectations by the college from its students. If the faculty committed any serious error while I was at Rollins it was in failing to demand a higher level of intellectual performance from me. We students could have been and should have been challenged more. I must admit that I witnessed a higher level of academic pursuit during my last few years at Rollins, but as I have mentioned, the collective agents of the college (students, faculty and administration) can never suffer too high a degree of "growth" in this area.

Nor need this goal be achieved at the expense of other programs, as I once believed. Greek organizations need not be eliminated, nor need athletic funds be re-directed. Both these programs are important to Rollins character and promote an Esprit de Corps. What is needed is an environment that also fosters, encourages and stimulates alternative learning programs. The changes must emanate from within, however, and in that sense the changes spiritual.

I want to make two closing comments. One negative, one positive.

First, the Rollins student body complained too much while I was a student. Actually, to be accurate, the Rollins student body complained too much without taking mature, constructive steps to improve those things about which we complained. A healthy institution would be one that translated that type of complaining into involvement.

Finally, the Rollins faculty is the school's most invaluable asset. I am most grateful to the college for exposing me to the men and women who demonstrated personal commitment to excellence I described above. Though valuable in the classroom, the faculty was invaluable in the commitment that so many made to growth and to a personal dedication to their subject. I am confident that I am prepared academically because of my classroom experience. However, I am inspired by the personal attributes so many faculty members demonstrated to me. It is this inspiration that will enable me to face the intellectual, ethical and social problems we face today. For that reason my Rollins experience is incapable of monetary evaluation but richly deserving of my sincerest praise and thanks."

Survey Shows Prospects Good

Orlando area businessmen are optimistic in their forecast of hiring plans for the final three months of 1977, according to a quarterly survey of Orlando businessmen released by Manpower, the world's largest temporary help service.

Don Dunham, owner of Manpower's Orlando office, said, "businessmen here, particularly among wholesale and retail merchants and manufacturing, are more optimistic about employment prospects during the next three months (October, November, December) than they were during a similar Manpower survey taken in June. Overall, 43% of the employers are projecting hirings during the next three months, up from 30% who made such projections in Manpower's June survey. Another 40% anticipate no change in their employment levels, and 17% are contemplating reductions," Dunham said.

The findings of the Manpower survey on a national basis indicate the U.S. hiring outlook is optimistic for the final three months of 1977 with no slowdown anticipated. The survey results indicate businessmen expect hiring activity to continue at a healthy pace during the final quarter of the year.

The Southern region of the country continues to lead the nation in hiring expectations as it has for the last two consecutive Manpower surveys with 37 percent of the region's employers expecting additional hiring. All 10 industry sectors for the South exceed those of the national sample in hiring plans.

The quarterly Employment Outlook Survey is conducted as a public service by Manpower, Inc. The survey is designed and administered by Manpower's International Research Department which uses a statistically representative sample of approximately 5,000 large employers, distributed among 10 industry sectors and some 150 U.S. cities.

Rollins: Evolution & Progression

"Where is Rollins College?", The Chairman of my department asked after I had informed him that I had accepted a position there. "In Winter Park, Florida," I replied. Seeing that it didn't register I quickly added, "Next to Orlando." Still no reaction. Growing impatient I said, "right next to where Disney is building an amusement park." "Oh, great I'll have to come visit you."

I thought back six weeks previously when on two occasions I had attempted to call the college from Wisconsin and the operator rang and rang and there was no answer. I began to have serious doubts about the health of the institution.

I knew little about private higher education. I had come from a background of big institutions where even the classes in the various graduate programs exceeded the largest classes at Rollins. What I did know about private colleges was that many of them were in trouble both financially and in the number of students enrolled, consequently, I approached the offer of a position at Rollins with some trepidation. Questions surrounding these concerns were foremost in my mind when I met President Critchfield for the first time. When I emerged from his office I was convinced that Rollins was the healthiest, most dynamic institution of its kind to be found anywhere in the country and one that had, as a part of its philosophy, a genuine commitment to quality teaching first. It was sometime later that I realized that Jack himself was new at Rollins, having been appointed the previous year, and much of what he conveyed to me was based on the hope that he could turn this institution into the kind of college that could compete with the best institutions in its own class. The fact that Jack believed this was enough to convince me that it would be done. I couldn't help getting the feeling though that somehow I had bought a piece of the Rock along with my newly instilled commitment to the future of the College.

During the next several years Rollins attracted an increasingly youthful, prolific (ask Dr. Burnett), bright and energetic faculty drawn from some of the finest educational institutions in the country. It acquired new facilities, buildings and renovations of existing structures and, I suppose most of all, two new cultural centers, the Pub and the Pool. But in all, the campus became a beautiful well maintained atmosphere for all of us to work in. During that same period of time we remained financially healthy and watched each year as our academic reputation grew along with the number of student applicants. Jack was true to his promise, but within an institution the size of Rollins, containing as it does a highly creative faculty and administration, differences of opinion were bound to arise over social and academic policies. But in retrospect, the college under President Critchfield's leadership thrived and internal change, not dramatic, but nevertheless steady, continued. The health of this institution today, I believe, underscores the soundness of the compromises that have been reached.

One final thought comes to mind this late afternoon and that is the genuine concern with which Jack sought to improve the status of women at Rollins and his sincere efforts to assist in every way the recruitment of minorities on this campus. Although not all of these goals have been realized it is hoped that his initiatives will be continued in the future. Above all, Jack Critchfield became one of the most eloquent spokesman for the survival of higher education and his efforts in this regard hopefully will never cease.

President Critchfield, there is one last great task that you must do for us, one that until now has eluded your administrative talents but the enlightened citizens of the day have now given you the instrumentality with which to perform the deed. Jack, I still can't seem to reach anyone when I call the campus, the telephone just rings, and rings and rings. . . .

Chiles Appointed VP of Student Affairs

Marguerite Chiles, Assistant Vice President of Student Affairs and Dean of Women at Furman University, has become the highest ranked woman at the co-ed institution by being named acting Vice President of Student Affairs.

If the name sounds familiar it is because Ms. Chiles participated in an administration exchange program between Rollins and Furman last Winter Term when she and Wanda Russell, Rollins' Associate Dean of Student Affairs, switched positions to gain insight into the administrative system of a comparable university.

Stereo Exhibit at SPE House

The Brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon in conjunction with Frutchey Audio of Winter Park will present demonstrations and a display of stereo equipment this Monday, October 10, at 6:30. The show will be on the back porch of the Sig Ep house and all members of the Rollins community are invited.

Stereos from $500, $1,500, and one super system will be demonstrated. The experts from Frutchey will not only explain how a stereo works, but also how to design the system that best fits your needs. Everyone will be invited to participate in designing the Stereo System that best fits his listening tastes, listening area, and budget.

Student Center News

The Student Center needs your help in designing a new logo. So, if you have a good idea, send your design along with your name, box number and telephone number to Post Office Box 2747 by October 19, 1977. The winning design will be published in the newspaper and a prize will be awarded. Hurry for the contest closes soon.

If you have any questions about your stereo, thinking about buying a new system or some new equipment, or you just want to know what makes the music always heard coming from the Sig Ep house, stop by Monday night after beans.

Sexuality Seminar This Tuesday

Is anybody out there having trouble with the Rollins "dating scene?"

This Tuesday (Oct. 11) at 7:30 p.m., Pinehurst will present the third and final program of their sexuality seminar. The film "Men's Lives" will be shown (it's short), followed by small group discussions.

THIS IS NOT JUST FOR MEN!

This film examines what exactly defines the terms "male" and "female;" how society pressures men and women to play certain roles; and consequently, how male-female relationships are affected by this in the dating scene, etc.

All of this will take place in the lobby of Elizabeth Hall at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

From the New York Times:

People who smoke filtered cigarettes risk dying two to nearly four years sooner than smokers of non-filtered ones, according to a study conducted at Edinboro State College.

More Carbon monoxide gets into the blood of people who smoke filtered cigarettes because the filters prevent the smoke from being diluted by oxygen. As a result, higher levels of carbon monoxide build up in the bloodstream which is linked to greater damage to the cardiovascular system, leading to heart attacks and strokes.

With the grain harvest either completed or well under way in the Northern Hemisphere this week, the world's food supplies were nearing the second highest level on record.

Despite abnormal weather patterns earlier this year, the United States, Russia, India, Turkey, and China all came through with excellent crops.

The bounteous grain suppliers are matched in other basic foods. World sugar output is expected to run nearly four million tons above world consumption. The production of beef, pork, and poultry in the key commercial markets is higher than last year's record as is milk and coffee production.

From the Miami Herald:

Large amounts of Ex-Lax, the popular laxative, have been secretly withheld from the market because they have been contaminated by the toxic chemical PBB. Federal investigators suspect that a number of other food and drug products also may have been contaminated due to the fact that Fluidized Processing, Inc., of Newark, N.J. was processing drug products with the same equipment it used to produce the flame retardant PBB.

This was the first time the PBB has been found outside Michigan where thousands of pounds were accidentally mixed with cattle feed contaminating much of the state's meat and dairy products.

From the Sentinal Star:

A combination chemical and biological control experiment at Orlando's Lake Baldwin has failed to check the spread of the aquatic weed, hydrilla, announced the Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission. Hydrilla has also inundated our own Lake Virginia.

The experiment to solve the problem of hydrilla started in 1975 when the Lake Baldwin was first treated with a week-killing chemical, then stocked with approximately 5,000 exotic white amur grass carp.

Soccer Round-up, Tars Now 5-1

Rollins vs. Georgia State

After a week of rest, rehabilitation and numerous strategy meetings, the Rollins College Soccer team again took to the pitch for a match against Georgia State University. After a somewhat lackluster effort last week against Tennessee Wesleyan the Tar line up was altered dramatically, with 5 position changes being made. This juggling act of Coach Howell's seemed to be effective as the game got underway. Rollins controlled the ball and was able to put a lot of pressure on the Georgia State defense. Andy Leeker hit the crossbar and Lew Mocerri was looking dangerous around the opponents net. Although Rollins controlled the bulk of the play, Georgia State had several golden opportunities to score. On a corner kick Bob Moody maneuvered in front for a head shot that seemed a sure goal. However, at the last instant Craig Kammien was able to stick out his foot and deflect the shot wide! Later, Georgia State had another, almost identical scoring chance. This time Chris "Walter" Domijon provided the last second heroics.

With the crowd calling for some goals, Rollins took the field for the second half. Although Rollins dominated the play, outshooting Georgia State 22-9, play seemed to break down near the goal where the Rollins players lacked the finishing touch needed to score. Finally Lew Mocerri was able to break the deadlock and score for Rollins. His goal was a beautiful one indeed. Steve "Sheik" Larson captured the ball at midfield and advanced it toward the Georgia State goal. Suddenly Mocerri, using his exceptional wheels, raced away from his defenders. Larson led him beautifully and Mocerri was able to flick it past goalkeeper Jim Leach for his 5th goal of the year and the first of the game. Rollins did not ease the pressure but no more goals were forthcoming. With a 5 and 1 record Rollins will face Erskine College Friday, October 7th.

Eric Coody advances the ball towards Tennessee's goal.

Tars Face Victory and Defeat on Road

The Rollins College Tars were on the road last weekend playing two games in North Carolina against U.N.C. Wilmington on Friday, September 23 and U.N.C. Chapel Hill on Saturday, September 24. They returned having lost the first by 0-2 and won the second by 2-0.

The first game, against U.N.C. Wilmington, was a disappointment. The Tars failed to take advantage of their midfield strength and played a generally lackluster game. However, the team had fine scoring opportunities. Lou Mocerri in particular pushed hard to get a goal but was consistently frustrated. In one instance, a shot of his hit the inside of the post and went in front of the goal.

It was under these circumstances that the Tars came to lose this game. The Rollins defense had difficulties in controlling the speed-oriented attack on Wilmington which allowed the opposition to score two goals. The first goal came midway through the second half and was scored by Tieri, one of Wilmington's fast and dangerous forwards. The second goal was scored with only one minute left in the game by Castilla. With so little time left, Rollins had no chance of recovering. The game ended 2-0 in Wilmington's favor.

The previous defeat did not deter Rollins from coming back to clobber U.N.C. Chapel Hill. The first half passed with Rollins eventually asserting themselves and taking command at mid-field. It was in the second half that the Tars scored their first goal. Craig Kammien, taking a throwin from Peter Porto, moved inside and hit it home. The second goal resulted with a through ball from Steve Larsen to Lou Mocerri who in turn slammed it into the Chapel Hill goal.

Rollins vs. Tennessee, 4-1

After playing two games on the road, the Tars came home to play their third game in four days against Tennessee Wesleyan College on Monday, September 26. Rollins triumphed by a margin of 4-1.

The Tars started out well enough by snatching two early goals. The first of these was easily scored by Eddie Waters, from a cross by Lou Mocerri. The second goal came minutes later. Peter Porto put the ball in the net from an Eddie Water's cross. Tennessee Wesleyan's Jim Harold concluded the half with a goal which was to be their team's only one.

In the second half, Tennessee had most of the play but Rollins managed to put away two more goals. The third goal came from a corner kick, taken by Eric Coody, and was slammed home by Andy Leeker's head. Steve Larsen scored the fourth and final goal.

Jai-Alai Opens Season

by Smith Benners

Cruising down I-4 coming into Orlando prior to registration, I saw a billboard which nearly caused me to lose control of my almost brand new car. Jai-Alai was starting the next day. After the heart palpitations had subsided, I managed to get myself to campus and place a call to Happy Ison, Public Relations man at the fronton. "Yes, indeed," he said, "Jai-Alai is starting ten days earlier this year, so we hope to see all you Rollins kids out here." Well, I don't know about everyone, but the hard-core group was all there opening weekend.

As reported last year, pari-mutuel wagering is off and running to new records. Everyone it seems, is out to win one of those dynamic daily doubles or big paying perfectas. Hence, the earlier starting date for those who couldn't wait more than a week after the close of harness racing to start tearing up tickets again and to reinstate that magic word 'if' into their vocabularies.

Play is already and will continue to be much more exciting this year as the management has upgraded the roster. There are ten new players, the most exciting of which has proved to be Sara, who is presently playing in the opening games but may soon be moved to the intermediate games. The most talented back-court man appears to be Enrique, whose stature and style are strangely reminiscent of Larrea. The most noticeable improvements in the quality of these new players is that they hustle more and throw harder than their predecessors and the majority of the balance of the pelotari.

Some of last year's favorites and some not so favored have left, leaving an occasional tear in the serious fan's eyes. The best of those — Larrea, Eddy, and Fermin, have all moved on to bigger and better frontons. Bobby Klusman's favorite, Aguirre (Hank), has been retired from the game. The two top stars from last years squad, Manolo and Maruri, are off to quick starts, with Maruri taking the early lead in the race for the singles title.

Located at 17-92 and 436, the fronton is an easy 10 minute drive from campus. Matinees are held on Mondays, Thursdays, and Saturdays at 12:00 noon. Evening performances are every night except Sunday, and they start at 7:30 p.m. If you don't have a pass, admission will cost anywhere from 50 cents to $5, depending on who you want to impress. Unless you go very early or very late, weekdays are the best times to go because of the extremely crowded and smoky conditions which exist on Fridays and Saturdays. You'd better hurry, though. The season ends January 16th.

Panama Canal: Right or Priveledge

by David Skidmore

The Carter Administration, Congress and the American people are currently engaged in heated debate over one of the most controversial foreign policy issues to arise in years. The focus of the controversy is the recently signed Panama Canal Treaty. The treaty's most important provision would allow Panama complete control over the canal beginning in the year 2000 whereas the treaty is designed to replace the United States' control over the Panama Canal in perpetuity.

Negotiations on a new treaty began 13 years ago in 1964 when Panamanian dissatisfaction over the existing treaty erupted into violence within the American controlled Canal Zone. The culmination of this slow and tedious negotiation effort was the new Panama Canal Treaty (actually two related accords) signed last month in Washington. Battle lines were drawn between foes and proponents of the treaty long before the signing. Backed by the support of former President Ford and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, President Carter is using the full force of his administration to back passage of the treaty. He claims the treaty ushers in a new era of American foreign policy in which small nations are dealt with on the basis of fairness and equality. However, treaty opponents such as Senator Strom Thurmond and Ronald Reagan have stirred public opposition by insisting the new treaty would jeopardize national security.

The effort to reach a new agreement was spurred by the passionate demands of Panamanians whose list of grievances over the Treaty of 1903 extend back to the circumstances of its origin. The manner in which the original treaty came into being is itself still a point of controversy.

Some points of dispute have been settled through the years, though not usually to the complete satisfaction of the Panamanians. Annual payments to Panama were raised in 1936 and 1955. In 1936, the provision through which the United States guaranteed Panamanian independence was eliminated. Also, Panamanian flags have been displayed jointly alongside United States flags in the Canal Zone as Presidents since Kennedy have recognized that the treaty language which grants the United States rights "as if it were the sovereign" still leaves titular sovereignty over the canal zone with Panama.

Panama's biggest complaint about the Treaty of 1903 rests in the fact that the United States is granted control over the canal for a limitless period of time. Panamanians feel that despite the fact that the United States built the canal, she has benefited disproportionately from its existence.

Panama's contribution to the canal has been a ten mile wide strip of land running through the heart of its country which disrupts normal travel and communications. Many Panamanians feel that foreign occupation of the canal zone damages Panama's unity and pride. As a result Panama argues that it can never be justly compensated for these sacrifices under the existing treaty.

All land within the Canal Zone belongs to either the Panama Canal Company, a United States government enterprise, or the United States Army. The Panama Canal Company provides many supporting services within the zone in addition to managing the canal. These include store businesses, entertainment and schools. Although Panamanians have free access to the zone, they cannot use the stores or other facilities within the zone unless employed by the Panama Canal Company and there is little social contact between Americans in the zone and Panamanians. The United States has exclusive jurisdiction within the zone. Furthermore, the Canal Zone surrounds Colon; Panama's major Atlantic Port, thus impeding its growth and access to the rest of the country.

Panamanian grievances surround all these facts. In addition Panamanians are jealous and agitated over the high standard of living of Americans within the zone. Panama also demands a higher percentage of canal revenues.

Over and above any other issue, Panama wants assurance that it will one day control the canal which runs through its country. Now, as in the past, emotional debate rages in the United States over how these demands are to be answered. It remains to be seen whether Congress will rest its faith in the New Panama Canal Treaty.
