STUDENT RETENTION: A COLLEGIATE PROBLEM

by

Dino Londia

As the cost of an education increases, so does the cost of dropping out. The costs, however, are absorbed, not only by the student, but by the college.

Each lost student amounts to an empty dorm room, lost tuition fees and a swipe at the school's reputation.

There are many factors which cause students to leave school before they receive their degree.

For some, the reason for quitting is clear. Many leave because of a low grade point average. Others leave because they can no longer afford that expensive school. Other students leave for subtler reasons such as, sex, age, socio-economic status, marital status, number of children, or a combination of any of these.

From school to school, methods to retain students vary. According to Dan S. Green, Director of academic affairs at Pennsylvania State University, there are three programs a school can adopt:

The first is the "sink or swim" method. That is, to let the student pass or fail on his own efforts. This conservative ideology is popular because it clearly separates the good from the bad. There is no initial cost to the college, because it is more of an attitude than a program. Its costs, however, quickly mount when dorm rooms become unoccupied.

The second method is "babying the student", to pass him as long as he shows effort. This is done by easing grade standards and requirements. Again, the initial costs are minimal; the dorm rooms are filled with passing students. The effect is not felt until years later, when student quality diminishes.

The third method, Green's preference, is to develop a "sequence of courses" that deal with students who might otherwise drop out. The initial cost, however, is considerable. Money for the program is spent without seeing any results. Only after two years can a college measure a change in the drop out rate.

Green mentioned no specific sequence of programs.

One program, offered by York College, in New York City, consisted of a one credit elective course called Student Development 101 (SD 101).

York, an inner-city liberal arts college, "found considerable evidence that the course was effective in integrating the students into the life of the college."

The program by York was handled scientifically. Max Prola and Daniel Stern, directors of the program created two groups. The control group consisted of those who were not enrolled in SD 101. The experimental students were those who were in SD 101.

The results were tangible.

Students who enrolled in the course utilized more of the college services and utilized them more often. They were more likely to read college publication and more likely to use the counseling services. These students also took an overall more favorable view of

Security News

Everyone you meet is welcoming you to Rollins. We are no exception. We sincerely hope your stay at the College is pleasant as well as an exceptional educational experience. We have listed below some important personal security tips that you should follow while a resident on the campus.

Room Security

Make sure that your room is LOCKED at all times when you are not present, even if that is for a few minutes.

Be security conscious of your dorm by insuring that outside doors are locked and not propped open.

Expensive Jewelry

Do not keep expensive jewelry in your room. Rent a bank safety deposit box. Other jewelry items should be kept

NIGHTTIME

Orlando and Winter Park offer a large variety of nightclubs and movies theaters. Here is a list of just a few. This is a sample; It is by no means complete.

Florida law requires a person to be twenty-one before they can drink. Although laws like these attack the symptom instead of the problem, they are enforced. The following nightclubs require you to be twenty-one:

Church Street Station is a group of restaurants and nightclubs all in one location. There is something for everyone here. Rosie O'Grady's Good Time Emporium features live twenties jazz. Cheyenne Saloon and Opera House feature live and recorded country music. A television show is recorded here on some nights. Disco is played by Phineas Phogg's Balloon Works while Apple Annie's smooths in the easy listening music. Located on West Church Street, their number is 422-2434.

Decades, which is literally a stones throw from the college, is always packed. The owner likes reggae and rock. On Park Avenue, their number is 644-2361.

The Enzian and 21st Century theaters feature films from the past. "Citizen Kane", "Casablanca" and "The Wizard of Oz" come alive on the big screen. After seeing these films on the theater movie goers realize that television is for "Bob Newhart" and "Cheers".

What Florida city was founded as Lakeview in 1858, changed to Osceola in 1870 and finally given its present name.

Its final name was established in 1881.

the college.

The most important result, however, was that "the course seemed to facilitate the integration of students into the life of the college also suggested that such students are more likely to persist in their efforts toward obtaining a degree."

In the 1985-86 school year, Rollins College will admit approximately 400 students. The exact number will not be known until this article is published.

The Rollins' class of 1985, after four years of attrition, graduated 243 students.

Rollins College has a different approach concerning student retention.

Currently, there is no specific program at Rollins which deals directly with student retention. But the idea of retention - to keep students at the college - is woven into the college's activities.

"In a way everything we do is aimed at retention," said Bari Watkins, Dean of the College.

A specific program is not out of the question though.

A student/faculty task force, headed by Dean Eller, is creating a seminar to "help people be better at going to college." One idea for the seminar, is to read a play which will be featured at Rollins, see the play, and talk about it afterward. The seminar, which will meet once a week, will consist of approximately twenty students.

Each seminar would help five percent of the freshman class.

But this is all an idea. The current "everything we do" retention program is producing effective results.

In the 1983-84 school year, Rollins lost - through academic dismissal and voluntary departure - 171 students. In 1984-85 the number was down to 150.
