First Progress Report on the Presidential Search

Written Charge to the Committee from the Board of Trustees

The Board of Trustees voted at its Fall Meeting to give this written charge to the appointed Presidential Search Committee responsible for seeking the best possible candidate(s) for the Presidency of Rollins College.

1. Develop a Statement of Desired Presidential Qualifications for approval by the Executive Committee of the Board, to guide the search and selection process.
2. Develop a timetable that will enable the board of Trustees to receive the recommendation of the committee by approximately April 1, 1990.
3. Conduct an active national search, to attract the most highly qualified candidates.
4. Conduct the search to follow affirmative action guidelines.
5. Make regular reports about the progress of the search to the Board of Trustees (through the Executive Committee), and the college community.
6. Observe strict confidentiality with respect to the names of candidates and the sensitive discussions of the committee throughout the search, and beyond.
7. Recommend one candidate for the presidency to the Board of Trustees, having available an alternate or alternates.

by Allan E. Keen, Chairman
Presidential Search Committee

I am pleased to provide this first report on the presidential search for a successor to Dr. Thaddeus Seymour. Because of the wide interest in the search and its importance to the future of Rollins College, the committee plans to make regular reports on the search process and progress.

The committee held its organizational meeting on Monday, November 6, and we are scheduled to meet again on November 22.

As many of you know, the Presidential Search Committee as established by the Board of Trustees, is composed of the following:

Barbara Lawrence Alford-Trustee, Samuel C. Certo-Faculty, M. Craig Crimmings-Alumni, D. Larry Eng-Wilmot-Faculty, George C. Grant-Administration, Allan E. Keen, Chairman-Trustee, Clifton O. Moran II-Student, Charles E. Rice-Trustee, Leigh A. Sigman-Student, James W. Small-Faculty, Robert D. Smither-Faculty, and Harold A. Ward III-Trustee.

Phyllis H. Ramey, who has loyally served the college for 25 years, has agreed to serve as the Executive Secretary to the committee. Her office will be located in the Casa Iberia, on campus.

The trustees' written charge to the Committee was accepted, and a copy of said charge will follow.

The initial tasks of the committee will be to discuss, at length, the priorities of Rollins College for presidential leadership, and the desired qualities and qualifications to be sought in the next president. The conclusions of the committee on these matters will be presented to the Executive Committee of the Board to insure that there is agreement before we begin to recruit candidates. At our first meeting, the committee generally concurred with the report of the Academic Search Consultation Service (ASCS). The ASCS report will serve as a working document for the committee.

The committee also engaged ASCS to assist us throughout the search selection process.

The committee decided to hold an open meeting on campus to seek additional suggestions and input about the type of person we should seek for the next president of Rollins. The meeting will occur on November 15, 1989, at 3:30 p.m. in the Faculty Club.

We have invited James T. Bell, the college's Affirmative Action Officer, to join us at our next meeting to inform the members of the committee on policies and procedures related to affirmative action.

Many members of the college community met with Dr. Ronald Stead and Dr. Samuel Spencer of the ASCS during their visit to campus on October 12 and 13. Their report has been submitted to and accepted by the committee, and two copies have been placed on reserve in the Olin Library and at the Brevard Campus. The consultants reported that everyone was most helpful during their visit. I want to thank each person who met with them for your time and assistance in helping their analysis of the needs of Rollins.

Also at the organizational meeting, we agreed on several procedural matters that will guide our work. It is important to emphasize that we plan to reach decisions by consensus where possible. Further, we agreed that the process will be open, but it will be an absolute necessity to maintain strict confidentiality with respect to the names of the candidates. We all recognize that most well-qualified candidates will not explore this presidency if they cannot be assured of such protection.

We also discussed a tentative timetable and plan for the search, but did not take formal action. The overriding principle will be to take as long as is required to conduct a thorough, effective, and credible search. On the other hand, we are

by Diana Scimone

Question: What is the third most widely used language in the USA?

Hint: It's also the one least likely to be taught in the country's colleges.

The answer is American Sign Language, or ASL—second in usage only to English and Spanish.

Surprised? Most people are. Even though ASL is "spoken" by more than sixteen million hearing-impaired people in the USA (not including their family members), until recently universities haven't considered it a language. "A few schools are beginning to offer it as an alternative to Spanish, French, and other languages to fulfill foreign language requirements" says Erica Hirschman, a senior here at Rollins.

Hirschman's interest in ASL began when she was faced with the requirement of studying a foreign language to fulfill her degree. "I knew I'd never use French, Spanish, or Russian in my career," she says, "but there was no other choice." Then she saw the film Children of a Lesser God, about a music therapist who uses ASL to communicate with deaf children.

Hirschman decided ASL would be a lot more useful to her career as a music therapist, and discussed the idea with Rollins' curriculum committee. They gave her the green light to take ASL at UCF. Hirschman says that class assignments such as test-driving a car at a nearby Toyota dealership—all under the guise of being deaf—gave her a new appreciation for what it's like to be handicapped.

"What started out as a class became a cause," she explains. She circulated a petition at Rollins to get ASL on our curriculum. In just one week 400 students signed—one-third of the student body.

As a result, Rollins began offering an ASL course this past September. The school now joins about 315 others around the USA that are beginning to recognize ASL as a language all its

Students Support Graduate Program in Counseling

Dear Editor:

I was totally unprepared for the announcement in my Tuesday evening class three weeks ago that brought attention to the fact that the Graduate Program in Counseling might cease to exist. This is my first year in the program and I have been challenged by my classes and been touched by the caring attitude of both the faculty and the students in the Counseling Program. My career as a Rollins student began this summer as a participant in the Eating Disorders Institute held on this campus and sponsored by the Counseling Department. It was a class act. The speakers, many of them Rollins Counseling Program graduates, were top notch and held positions of respect in the counseling field throughout the country. I also took advantage of my time on campus this summer to quiz students currently enrolled in the program as well as graduates about the strengths and weaknesses of the department. It came as a real surprise to get nothing but positive feedback about the counseling program. As a student this term, I am beginning to understand and participate in the pride that is felt about this Counseling Program. I have never advertised for the schools I have attended previously, I do advertise for Rollins College, its Graduate Counseling Program in particular.

Greatness should not be measured in quantity—whether it be financial, numbers of students in the program, or the size of its faculty. Greatness should be measured by quality. That is the reason I chose Rollins over other qualified institutions.

Regarding Popcorn Poppers and Other Appliances...

by Kim Schorer

Do you remember having read the rules and regulations pertaining to the possession of electrical appliances in the dorm rooms? I recall reading the rule about not using hot air popcorn poppers in the dorms the summer before I arrived at Rollins. Thus, I didn't bring my popper to school. I also remember reading the rule one more time as I was flipping through the rules in the R-Times.

Throughout the year, however, I continually noticed how many other people had popcorn poppers and used them all the time in their rooms. This being the case, I didn't really understand why popcorn poppers were illegal. By Christmas time, my roommate and I had a popper which we frequently used with no problem. Therefore, I thought I would bring one with me this year. Everything was fine until one night when I was making popcorn. I set the fire alarm off. Everyone in the building had to evacuate and the firemen came rushing in. Unfortunately, I was the guilty party. I knew that hot air popcorn poppers were illegal, but I had used on in spite of this.

The moral of this story is that if you plan on using a hot air popcorn popper, or any other illegal appliance, be prepared for the consequences. The initial fine for setting the fire alarm off in a dorm is two hundred and fifty dollars. The prohibited items are illegal for a reason; they do set the fire alarm off. Wouldn't you rather use microwave popcorn than pay two hundred and fifty dollars for a bowl of hot air popped popcorn?

Don't take the chance of making everyone evacuate the building, and most importantly, don't take the chance of making the fire department come to Rollins, one more time, for an ignorant mistake when they might really be needed elsewhere. Play it safe and don't use illegal electrical appliances in your dorm rooms.

Spending Thanksgiving Day in Orlando

If you are an international student, or if it just isn't feasible for you to go home, the holidays can be a lonely time. This Thanksgiving, however, you don't have to be alone. Spend some time with a local family. The Office of Student Activities and Organizations is screening local families for hosting Rollins students during the Holidays.

If you would like to spend Thanksgiving Day with a local family, simply call 646-2624, or come by the Office of Student Activities, located in the Mills Memorial Center.

aware we must keep the process moving, particularly at the stage where we begin to interact with prospective candidates. We will be in a better position to outline a definite timetable after the next meeting.

Because lead time is required to post the official announcement of the search, the committee reviewed an advertisement which will appear in The Chronicle of Higher Education on November 22 and 29... At about the time the announcement is published, we will begin an active recruitment effort by contacting key individuals around the nation to identify well-qualified candidates for Rollins. In addition, we will be asking members of the Rollins community and the friends of the college to recommend prospective candidates.

I am pleased with the quality of the membership of the committee, their individual commitment, and the spirit of cooperation that was evident in our first meeting. With the support of the entire campus community, the Board, and the friends of the college, I am confident that the Presidential Search Committee will attract extremely talented individuals to consider this important position, which will provide the leadership for Rollins College into the 21st century.

Questions about the search process, or on this first progress report, should be directed to Allan E. Keen, Chairman, or Phyllis H. Ramey, Executive Secretary.

Applications, nominations, and expressions of interest for the presidency of Rollins College should be directed to: Mr. Allan Keen, Trustee and Chairman; Presidential Search Committee; Rollins College; Campus Box 2747; Winter Park, FL 32789.

own—not just “gestures in English,” but a distinct language with its own unique vocabulary, idioms, and grammar. Most of these universities simply offer ASL as a course, but a few allow ASL to fulfill foreign language requirements, including Boston College, Boston University, Catholic University of America, Harvard, New York University, University of California, and University of South Florida. [At this time the ASL class at Rollins does not fulfill the language requirement. However, Hirshman hopes to see this aspect implemented in the near future. “Everyone's input and cooperation, especially the foreign language department's, is essential to see this work,” said Hirshman.]

In addition, because some high schools now offer ASL as part of their foreign language programs, some colleges are starting to accept these credits in place of the more popular Spanish and French.

Groups host speaker to defend conservative-based economic theories

Economics of discrimination...the effects of antipoverty programs on poverty (have they increased it?)...the transfer society: The myth and the reality...the economics of education....

These are some of the topics that Dr. James Gwartney may touch on during his lecture Monday night, November 27 at 7:30 p.m. in the Galloway Room. The lecture, free and open to the public, will be followed by a question and answer session.

A Professor of Economics at Florida State University, Gwartney is the author of several books, most notably Economics: Private and Public Choice (with Richard Stroup), one of the most widely-used texts on the principles of economics in the United States. His articles have appeared in numerous publications, including the Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, American Economic Review, and the Journal of Political Economy.

Gwartney's lecture is being hosted and funded by the Rollins Economics Club, Rollins Pre-Law Society, Rollins College Productions and Intercollegiate Studies Institute (ISI).

ISI, a national non-profit, non-partisan educational organization, is funding the majority of the lecture cost. ISI is determined to present on campus the ideas that can reestablish our colleges and universities as institutions that impart a truly liberal arts education and thus further our American heritage. For 36 years, ISI has worked to preserve the principles of individual liberty and personal responsibility, limited government, private property and a free market economy, and moral norms based on the classical and Judeo-Christian tradition.

The Grand Scheme

by Bill Boyd

The current conflicts and demonstrations in Eastern Europe represent an outcry from the oppressed peoples behind the Iron Curtain. Mass demonstrations in Czechoslovakia, Hungary, East Germany, and Poland called upon Soviet Premier Gorbachev to act quickly and decisively toward his policies of glasnost and perestroika; however, Premier Gorbachev cannot respond to the public's demands because his policies have run amuck, or have they? If his policies of glasnost and perestroika continue to receive a huge reception among Eastern Europeans, Westerners, and Russians, there does exist three difficult and crucial dilemmas: 1) another Russian Civil War, 2) United States humiliation, and 3) an opportunity, for Communism, to expose the "American Dream" (to some an American myth generated from the liberal consensus since 1945), as not being conducive to economic equality and opportunity.

The first possible dilemma, the fear of another Russian Civil War, pertains to the wants and desires of the Soviet demonstrators, who demand Gorbachev to act in a more progressive fashion. Will they receive what they ask?

I do not believe so, since Russian history confirms the inability of the Russian masses to take charge during troubled periods, especially when a national figure needs to emerge and orchestrate the proceedings of a provisional government. Moreover, if the Soviet regime collapsed unexpectedly, who or what political faction would, eventually, lead the Russian nation to the "good-life?"

Even if a group or an individual took the reigns of command, who's to say that the given group or individual would represent the will of the Russian populace. Previous provisional governments, although confronting popular discontent—political, economical, and social—have fallen to revolutionary activities; just as Kerenski fell before the feet of Lenin and the Bolsheviks.

The second dilemma, United States international humiliation, rests upon the action or inaction of the United States. If Premier Gorbachev decides to crack the whip (as he has in Armenia, Georgia, Czechoslovakia, as well as upon a major Russian newspaper editor) and to regain hegemony over glasnost and perestroika, the United States could assist Gorbachev to relax Eastern European public tensions (possibly helping our major antagonist evolve into an even greater threat to American democracy).

However, if the United States does not take a stand to support and to further the efforts of the demonstrators, America, once again, exposes democracy as weak and incompetent, just as Presidents Kennedy and Bush exemplified in the "Bay of Pigs" and the Tianenmen Massacre. The U.S. must decide whether or not to pay lip service to the "American Dream."

On a more imaginative level, Gorbachev may be calling the West's bluff; telling the Western nations—namely the United States and West Germany—to put their money (capitalist society) where their mouth is. During the past few weeks, East Germans have fled their homes and joined their "brothers" in West Germany. And as of November 8, 1989, all East German borders have been called open by East German Communist leader,

Is This Really the Best We Can Do

by Imogene Weatherman

In a recent article published in National Interest Francis Fukuyama promulgated the end of history, claiming that the Soviet Union's now moribund experiment in Marxism spelled the end of ideological conflict as a force for historical change. American democratic capitalism has won.

Now before we all start waxing euphoric about our victory, let me sober you up a bit. If liberalism has won, that means the highest expression of man is a system predicated on the notion that man is inherently self-serving and self-aggrandizing. (In case you missed something, the central tenet of liberal capitalism is that "greed, for lack of a better term, works.") And if all other systems have lost, that means that a system predicated on the notion that man can "curb and transcend" his baser motives, that man can construct with his fellows a community dedicated to the common good, such a system will never be. If capitalism really is the endproduct of ideological evolution, if it really is the best man can do, then I'm glad history is over; maybe if no historians bother documenting the world's coming kap-fest, succeeding generations will never know how badly we failed them.

The Final Word

by Bill Boyd

Thank you for your response regarding the content of "Affirmative Action: A Noble Idea Shot to Hell," as well as, for having the courage to sound more offensive than I.

Yes, you quoted me correctly regarding the "guilt" clause. Moreover, you do not refute it, and even take it a step further by implicating white Europeans—America's ancestry. Isn't that special.

Next, you tell me that upon receiving emancipation, the black man left the plantation with nothing, insinuating that America's white ancestry, mainly immigrants from Ireland, Italy, and Germany, had been prepared to conquer the world. Well, you're wrong. America's European ancestors never balled and complained, or needed an organization to "equate" them with mainstream America. America is not about equality, for equality produces mainstream mediocrity; America is about "equal opportunity," the opportunity to achieve, through our many public educational facilities, financial security/stability through hard-work, not preferential treatment.

Yes, I did say that Affirmative Action fostered greater animosity between and among racial or opposing groups. Hence, the word "group." The idea of "group" isolates individuals; groups do not integrate, for integration destroys the basic foundations of a group—individual difference. Therefore, the only way Affirmative Action can become effective is to break down the "group" concept of discrimination and establish an "individual" concept.

Why do I say this? Well, I believe that people discriminate towards groups because groups symbolize an united frontal attack; while, on the other hand, people can act amiably once removed from the group sphere. However, I am not trying to say that discrimination does not exist, because it does. And since it does exist, the only way to remedy the situation is through the "individual" concept, and the exchange of opinions.

I am all in favor of equality, as long as every "individual," of every race and sex, can receive the same forms of assistance while preventing a "group" conflict—usually aimed at the white, middle-class male.

Igor Krenz (probably after receiving orders from "Big Brother" Gorbey).

With the flood gates wide open, the capitalist phobia toward mass overcrowding and homelessness grows ever more inevitable among West Germany's major cities. However, this represents Gorbachev's opportunity, once and for all, to expose democratic/capitalist rhetoric, as being just that, only rhetoric!

Could Gorbachev purposely plan to overburden the west while trying to salvage and to strengthen Soviet Communism? Without homes, food, jobs, or proper medical care, the Eastern European might reflect upon a time when the above necessities ensured life, a decent amount of happiness, and security rather than struggling for almost nothing. Gorbachev could want, in short, the Eastern Europeans to observe, first hand, that capitalism does not work. Capitalism ignores the needs of the impoverished.

Which of the above prophecies are correct? I do not know; however, the United States must keep all its intelligence avenues and information lines open because Gorbachev's objective neither calls for democracy nor capitalism, but a "kinder, gentler" capitalism. Like Lenin's New Economic Policy, Gorbachev wants to breathe life into a degenerating, noncreative, and unproductive system to compete in the world market. Yet, Gorbachev, also knows that a severe crack-down may be necessary to return the status quo to Soviet Russia.

Nice Going America

by Stephen Berry

"we may be witnessing . . . not just the end of the Cold War . . . but the end of history as such: that is, the end point of mankind's ideological evolution and the universalization of Western liberal democracy as the final form of human government."

-- Francis Fukuyama

Nice going America, it was hard fought but you did it—you vanquished the evil empire. Grab up a beer and pat yourselves on the back, you kicked some butt and it's Miller time. But what's this? You don't feel much like celebrating? But why not?

Why indeed. Our arch-enemy lies crippled before us, admitting we were right all along, and we can't even muster an "I told you so." The reason, I think, is real simple—we're just too tired.

At the end of World War II America stood at the pinnacle of its greatness—the one time colony now an international colossus. Unfortunately, though, America could not just have its way with the world—another great power had risen in the East, and seemed determined to thwart America's post-war plans. And if that wasn't infuriating enough, America couldn't even tell this new power where to get off, because such brash (though warranted) reappraisals might result in an entire world basking in an atomic glow. America had two choices: it could stand for something, present as always the image of the benevolent community, ready to lend a hand to anyone who requested help; or it could stand against something, hunker down and fight communism wherever it reared its ugly head.

It's always easier to stand against something. Once you've got a "them", you feel much better about yourself as an "us". If they are evil, and you can define yourself as distinctly not like them, then you must be good. Besides, us vs. them is clean, it's simple, it doesn't require you to do a lot of thinking on your own. You just watch them, wait for them to do something, and then attempt to undo it. This is the sort of brilliant strategy that not only gets you into Vietnam, it gets you in real deep.

Thus, America has for the past forty years diverted its energies into the Cold War. But the trouble with us/them strategies is that their comforting simplicity masks the fact that they aren't realistic. And when "they" decide that they've had enough, the us/them construct falls apart—the dam breaks and reality comes flooding back in. This is why America can't seem to celebrate its victory—for four decades it has ignored reality in favor of bashing "them", and now it must slowly, painfully, come to terms with the reality it has wished so hard to ignore—America is in decline.

It stings like a bitch don't it; to any real American the word decline has four letters. To even admit the possibility that America could be declining mandates that we throw out all those wonderful stories we tell ourselves about how we are to endure forever as a model to all the world of how you're supposed to do it. We were supposed to be special, to be something altogether different, to be a country that would pioneer a better, more humane, world order. We were supposed to be magic. Nobody believes that anymore, America's grown much too cynical for that; but, damn if it still don't hurt. Nothing stings like the truth.

What Are the Problems With the S.G.A.?

by David Stein

Maybe I can see problems with the student government because I am not in it. I consider myself to be an average, somewhat thoughtful Rollins student who, while not being completely apathetic, was never a big "joiner." While I don't know the intricate details of how the S.G.A. functions, I will attempt to describe the problems with the Rollins' student government system as I see them.

To me, the problems start with freshman elections. Freshman are asked to select their representatives to the S.G.A. during the first month of school. While freshman representatives are important to bring the views of their class to the attention of S.G.A., I don't think freshman are given enough time to know their candidates. I remember when I voted in my freshman year. I knew two or three of the candidates from classes, so I voted for them. This doesn't "let the best man win", necessarily.

Another problem with the S.G.A. elections is the amount of money the candidates spend. It appears that the people with the most money, those who could buy the most fliers, won the elections. When I was a freshman, our current S.G.A. president, Julie Hernandez, put a fortune cookie in every box with a note that said "Vote for Julie." People tend to remember novelties like this during elections, but not everyone can afford to do this.

Though elections are held every year, it seems that the same people always win. I think many students figure that since these people were on S.G.A. last year, they must know what they are doing so they are re-elected. As a result, a cliquish atmosphere seems to have permeated the student government. While the current S.G.A. members are certainly college leaders, I believe there are a few more out there that should have a better chance to be included.

Another problem with the S.G.A. is that they are too far removed from the students they are supposed to serve. I believe this issue was brought up last year and attempts were made to relay what happened during S.G.A. meetings to the students. This year, I have seen no attempt to continue this trend.

It was not until this year that I realized how much money the S.G.A. controls. I believe the budget for the 1989-90 school year is approximately $250,000. Where does all this money go? I'm sure most of it goes for worthwhile purposes, but I would still like to know how it is spent. This leads to another problem with S.G.A.: they don't have to account to anybody. The S.G.A. is able to spend money for any purpose without the knowledge of the Rollins community. Recently, I was able to see a copy of S.G.A. expenditures since June 1989. This list was more closely guarded than the sacred Fox Day fox. While it contained many nickel and dime expenditures, some large bills stood out as for Dexter's and the purchase of several airline tickets. I'd like to know what these bills were for.

I have thought a little about these problems and have come up with a few solutions I think are viable. First, the use of posters, fliers, etc., in S.G.A. elections should be banned. Instead, the newspaper should run the picture of each candidate along with a brief introduction by the candidate indicating why they are qualified for the job and why they want it. The newspaper could also be used to publish abridged minutes of regular S.G.A. meetings to keep students informed of S.G.A. activities.

One way to bring an infusion of "new blood" into the S.G.A. would be to limit students to two consecutive terms in S.G.A.. After two terms, the student would not be allowed to run for one year. Using this system, students active in S.G.A. would be able to serve on S.G.A. three of their four years while other students would also be able to participate in the student government.

Finally, on the issue of S.G.A. funds. The S.G.A. should be required to publish its budget, possibly at the beginning and end of the each year to show where money was intended to go and where it went. Another way would be to publish the expenditures of the S.G.A. at the end of each month. The Rollins community should be made aware of the use of these funds. One way to create a check on the S.G.A. would be to form a committee, made up of faculty and students who are not in S.G.A., that would periodically audit the S.G.A.'s financial books. While the committee would not control S.G.A. funding, it would provide a source of accountability for the S.G.A.

These are the problems with S.G.A. that I have noticed. Hopefully, the S.G.A. will take these problems and solutions into account. Only through correcting these problems can the S.G.A. become a group more representative of the students.

To the editors of The New Sandspur

Dear editors,

It has recently come to my attention that there is to be no general referendum on the new SGA By-Laws. Now, the new constitution was recently voted in, and, if I may say so, it was railroaded through: we had two days to look at it, and as I was rather busy studying for exams on those two days, I barely had time to scan the new constitution before the polls closed. I have since looked over the new constitution more carefully and I have noticed that most of the procedures are to be described in the By-Laws. What I mean to say is, it appears that the student body has ratified a set of by-laws (by extension of ratifying the new constitution) which we have not even seen. As the real nuts-and-bolts powers, organization, operating procedures, and limitations are described not in the constitution but in the By-Laws, I am hereby suggesting that the new By-Laws be put to a referendum.

I am also disturbed by the new budgeting policy, under which organizations now have to ask for money for each specific event. The Jewish Students' League is already "in the red" because its members advanced money for events and no one in the SGA told us, even though we asked about budgets, that there was so much as a possibility that they were not going to hand out budget money in the same way that they had in the past.

But I digress. Think about it, Rollins students, both those of you who voted for the new SGA constitution and those who were too busy to worry about it: we have a new SGA constitution; it was railroaded through; it continually refers to "the By-Laws." The By-Laws are specifically cited as the description of:

a) enumerating the responsibilities

ties of each branch of the SGA

b) procedures for appointing the President's Cabinet

c) manner of choosing officials, for example the head of each branch of the SGA (President, Vice-President, and Chief Justice).

The By-Laws appear to outline all operating procedures for the SGA, including election and appointment procedures, and the responsibilities of each officer and member.

We, the Rollins student body, have ratified the new constitution and by extension the new By-Laws. But we have not seen the By-Laws. I ask you, Rollins students, is this democratic? Are we assured a voice in student government when we are not familiar with the operating, let alone voting, procedures of the Student Government Association? I say we should have the right to vote on the new By-Laws; let us ratify OR VETO them, as we see fit. Let us at least have the chance to choose whether to approve the new By-Laws or not.

The By-Laws have much greater power than the constitution in that they describe each member's duties and the SGA's procedures. I say the student body as a whole should have a voice in approving or disapproving the By-Laws as well as the constitution. If you agree with me, then let us call for a vote. Let us suggest, no let us demand of the SGA to put the new By-Laws to a referendum. To this end we can speak to each SGA officer and representative, we can write to The Sandspur, we can discuss the issue with other students; but let us continue to press our point until we obtain our objective. Give us the power of referendum.

Graduate Counseling Program

It is my hope that the Rollins College faculty is made up of the quality I have found in the Counseling Program. May they be individualists, not a group of uninformed faculty blindly caught up in the politics that generally surround a decision such as this. Rollins has a unique situation in their Graduate Counseling Program. Their students are treated as important individuals, not as numbers being shuffled through a program. This "I am special" treatment is why I choose to pay the higher price of tuition to attend Rollins College.

To Rollins I say, "Protect what you have. It is unique, it's special, and it's worth preserving."

Stephanie Johnson
Student in the Graduate Program in Counseling

Dear Editor:

I am a second-year student in the graduate program in counseling, and I want to express my concern that the existence of the program is in jeopardy. The final decision will not affect my own graduation. However, I believe that Rollins College would be doing a great disservice to the growing Central Florida area if this excellent program was to be discontinued. There is an increasing need for counselors in our community, and local agencies and hospitals are very supportive of the program at Rollins because of the professional quality of the Rollins graduates they employ.

I hope that those who are in a position to vote on whether or not the program continues will come to the realization that whether the real issue is financial, or based on the rhetorical question of whether or not a counseling program is appropriate for a liberal arts curriculum, the benefits derived by the community as a result of this program far outweigh either consideration.

Sincerely,
Melanie K. Stein

Pinehurst Grants Amnesty to Rollins

On Wednesday, November 15, Pinehurst is proud to present Bruce Hoffsfield, spokesperson for the Orlando chapter of Amnesty International, at 6:30 p.m. in the Knowles Memorial Chapel. Amnesty International may be best known to Rollins students for its series of superstar rock concerts featuring such artists as Sting, Bruce Springsteen, U2, Peter Gabriel, and others.

However, Amnesty reaches far beyond a cause for performers to give time to. Amnesty actively involves its members in letter writing campaigns to press for the release of "prisoners of conscience," political prisoners often held without reason and without trial for simply voicing an opinion contrary to what those in "authority" have established. These campaigns have been remarkably successful, gaining the release of hundreds of prisoners, and Amnesty's effort continue constantly. Amnesty also takes stands on other human rights issues, such as capital punishment and other crimes against humanity. For its efforts, Amnesty International was awarded the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize.

This is a great opportunity for all members of the Rollins Community to learn more about this organization and perhaps become involved in the global protection of human rights. Since Pinehurst itself stands for the principles of diversity and the freedom of its expression, we are particularly pleased to be presenting this program to Rollins. We encourage Rollins' faculty, students, and administration to explore with us what Amnesty International is all about.

ACTIONS/ REACTIONS

ACTIONS/ Reactions is a weekly column in The New Sandspur used to present the views of Rollins Community members on various topics.

Last Thursday, the Orlando Sentinel printed the results of a survey titled, "What's Hot on Florida's Campuses." This poll, which represented the Rollins student body claimed the following "hots": car-BMW; author-Maya Angelou; magazine-Sports Illustrated; major-English; political topic-Gay Rights; beverage-any cheap beer; snack-Dominos Pizza; movie-"Sea of Love" and pick-up line-"You're a lot more mature than most freshmen."

Were you, or anyone you know, polled for this survey? Do you agree with the generalizations made?

"I tend to agree with the results of this survey. From what I see around me, the poll seems pretty accurate. This, however, doesn't mean that this poll reflects my ideas of what is hot and what is not. I was not surveyed, nor have I heard of anyone who was." Jesse Nickelson, sophomore.

"I wasn't asked to give my opinion for the Sentinel survey, but I think it's an accurate stereotype of Rollins. I think, however, that there are hotter political topics than Gay Rights." Ty Saal, sophomore.

"I didn't reply to any poll like this before. I disagree with the hottest magazine. With half of the students being female, how can the most popular magazine be Sports Illustrated? The rest of them are pretty relevant with what's going on at Rollins now—especially with Diversity Week's Gay Rights Day and Maya Angelou's visit." Donna Brinkman, sophomore.

"I hadn't seen or heard of this survey before, but we couldn't go wrong. I mean, what Rollins had as the "hots" applies to just about every school." Malon Meredith, sophomore.

"I don't particularly agree with the generalizations, but I feel that the statements made in the Sentinel are accurate representations of the attitudes held by Rollins students. Hopefully, we can develop a balance and grow." Jason Dittmer, freshman.

HUNGER RELIEF ORGANIZATION

A Fast for a World Harvest Thursday

The community of Rollins College showed its support of world hunger from its large donation of bread to be given to the Christian Service Center. This display of concern at the St. Elizabeth of Hungary Service at Knowles Memorial Chapel last Sunday began World Hunger Week at Rollins College.

In communities across the country, the Thursday before Thanksgiving has become a special day to fast, to raise funds and awareness as part of Oxfam America's FAST FOR A WORLD HARVEST. Oxfam America is an international agency that funds self-help development projects and disaster relief in poor countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean.

Give up eating for a meal or for a day, and donate the money saved to help Oxfam America fight world hunger. The sisters of Phi Mu Sorority and the members of the Hunger Relief Organization will be taking donations in Beans, Tuesday through Thursday. You may experience the rewards of giving by donating money from your R-Card. You are also encouraged to experience what it is like to go hungry by participating in the fast.

There will be a special service in Knowles Memorial Chapel on November 15 at 9:00 p.m. commencing the fast. Juice and other refreshments will be available during the Fast Day, November 16, at the Sullivan House. The fast will end at 6:00 p.m. with Break-Fast at the Sullivan House with a slide show, bread and soup.

The Hunger Relief Organization calls on the Rollins community to show its concern and participate as well as donate on Fast Day. You'll not only feel what it's like to go hungry, you'll know how good it feels to help those who are. Let us fast together. Let us join in a common effort to share our abundance and exercise our choice to express our concern that others may eat.

What's Today? Laundry Day

by Jane Carpenter

It's Thursday, laundry day. Time to drag out the overstuffed laundry bag from the closet and attempt to sort a week's worth of dirty clothes. The mere thought of it makes me dream of the magical laundry chute in the Land of Home, where dirty clothes mysteriously reappeared white and bright.

It's Friday, laundry day. The once overstuffed laundry bag has now swelled to gross proportion. I can't put it off any longer, today the laundry must be done. But the familiar apprehension sets in, and I let it taint my better judgment. After all, there are still a few things in the bottom of the drawer that I could wear.

It's Saturday, but really, today is laundry day. The overstuffed, swollen laundry bag is now ready to walk itself to the washing machine. After taking a deep breath, I dig out a bright orange box with those ever-present words "new and improved" scrawled in the corner and head for the machines.

I guess the guy waiting for the next free washer must have seen my new pet laundry bag walking behind me, guided by its rope leash because he cleared out pretty quickly. I was alone with the heavy-duty washing machines, the bright orange box, and, of course, the living laundry bag. Sheepishly, I pulled out the typed list of the sacred "laundry laws" that the fairy godmother of the Magical Kingdom of Home wisely prepared for me. Fourteen laws seemed to glare at me from the page. Fourteen Laws! When does the fairy godmother of the laundry find time to moonlight as the supertime chef of "Le Restaurant de Home"? Deciding that I wasn't shooting for an award for the cleanest whites and brightest brights, I skimmed over the laundry laws before refolding them to their former position and hiding them in the side pocket of my laundry bag, where they will probably sit for the remainder of the year.

I quickly condensed the laundry laws into a three-fold plan. First step, SORT CLOTHES. This is harder than it seems. I can't handle these value judgments as to whether my patterned shirts are to be classified as darks of lights. There is always some confusion when it comes to gray, also. After a somewhat successful dissection of the laundry bag beast, I had finally progressed to the next step.

ADD DETERGENT. The back of the orange box had cute little pictures of measuring cups along with a couple of rules of its own. I should have guessed that this would be absolutely no help to me at all because of course the box had not come with one of those cute little measuring cups. Estimation was never one of my strengths, but I was determined to make this compact version of laundry laws work, so I waited for the white powder rain to settle on my clothes until it seemed enough for the job.

Final step, SET WATER TEMPERATURE. Whites called for hot water and the darks were to go in cold. Since I fudged the sorting clothes step, I figured that warm would be the safest setting—not to mention the fact that the washer was already set there so someone else must have followed the same reasoning. I put my quarters in and let the machine take over.

The first hurdle had been crossed and part two of the laundry seemed a lot less complicated. The dryer wasn't as intimidating, since it only has one button. I remembered that I was forewarned to take out T-shirts before they got completely dry as to avoid ironing, but sorting through the huge mass of wet clothes hardly seemed worth a wrinkle-free T-shirt. The end was near.

There was that wonderful fragrance of clean clothes that are fresh from the dryer floating out of the laundry room and down the hall. The scent must have served as a safety signal that the laundry beast had been tamed because the guy who had previously abandoned me returned to the washing machines with a beast of his own.

The warm clothes stacked on my bed would have made even the laundry fairy godmother proud. Satisfied with my accomplishment, I breathed a sign of relief that I wouldn't have to visit the laundry room again until next Thursday... Friday... well, definitely by Saturday.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Coming Full Circle

C. L. Corbett

"The more things change, the more they remain the same." I forget who said that, but I do know that it was someone great. Shakespeare, maybe. Well, whoever it was, they were right.

I mention this because I read in the Orlando Sentinel the other day where The Brierpatch (that's the restaurant next to Victoria's Secret) is soon going to change management. The new management happens to be none other than the former owners of East India. For those of you faithful people who have forgotten, East India used to be the quaint, charming little ice cream shop next to what is now Federucci's Marketessen (formerly the Marketessen). Now it's just a big hole. Confused yet? Well you should be, because none of this has anything whatsoever to do with things remaining the same because they're changing.

The reason I quoted that unknown famous person is because The Brierpatch used to be The YumYum Tree, which was, you guessed it, an ice cream shop. Get it now? From an ice cream shop to a restaurant, back to an ice cream shop. Plus the same article mentioned as how the new owners of the old East India (those would be the people who own Park Plaza Gardens) are going to turn what used to be the East India ice cream shop into... an ice cream shop. (Now all we need is for the people who own Le Cordon Bleu - the French restaurant on Fairbanks - to take over the new management of La Belle Verriere - the French restaurant on Park Ave. - which just changed management last year.) So basically, what this all amounts to is that the same people who own all the old businesses on Park Ave. also own all the new businesses on Park Ave., they just keep switching buildings. (Which makes just about as much sense as anything else that happens in Central Florida.)

I wouldn't even bring any of this up, but (there's always a but, isn't there) I was chatting with a friend of mine who also grew up in this area, and we chanced to discuss all the changes that have occurred on Park Avenue since we could remember. And of course we mentioned East India closing, and reopening - under a different name, I'm assuming - at The Brierpatch, and hey wait a minute, wasn't that where the YumYum Shop used to be? So I went and asked, et voila, it certainly was. Except they called it the YumYum Tree, which I don't remember, but hey, I was only 6 years old at the time. What do I know?

I do know that I used to love the YumYum Whatever-It-Was-Called. It had these red and white striped chairs and the backs were made of wrought iron, painted white and heart shaped. (Gee, kinda like some of the chairs at East India.) Actually, as far as I can recall, the whole place was pretty much red and white and pink. And the ice cream was delicious. Of course, when you're six all ice cream is delicious, but one flavor in particular was especially good. It was vanilla with peppermint stick candy crushed in, and probably something else, but I don't remember that much. When my parents would take us to the Winter Park Sidewalk Art Festival in the Spring, they would always get us an ice cream cone at the YumYum Tree/Shop/Whatever. Until it closed. Then we went to East India. (Of course, now that both are closed, I don't know where to get an ice cream cone after the Spring Art Festival anymore, unless both new ice cream shops open by then. Or maybe, because this is all so confusing, I won't even get an ice cream cone. Maybe I won't even go to the festival. Maybe I'll just stay at home until everyone on Park Avenue finishes moving around.)

So anyway, that's why I say that famous quote. Because, being the proud native Floridian that I am, I remember all these things changing from one thing to another, only to change back to what they were in the first place. Which may account for the confused mental state in which I exist today... While we're on the subject, does anyone remember what Park Promenade Jewelers used to be before it was Park Promenade Jewelers? Because I don't, and it's driving me crazy.

Some new notes on the hip happenings in the Greater Orlando Metropolitan Area:

- Don't forget the Hemlock Society's Thanksgiving Dinner on Saturday, November 18. It's going to be at 12:30 PM at

- The Friends of the Cornell Fine Arts Museum want to remind everyone that they meet the fourth Monday of every month of the school year (that would be September-May) at the Museum, at 10:00 AM. This is for people interested in supporting the educational, cultural and social activities of the Museum. Information can be had by calling 646-2526.

- Those fine folks up Sanford way, the Sanford Historic Trust to be exact, will be presenting their first annual "Holiday Interior Tour of Homes". This features a tour of eight homes in the historic district. It's a-happenin' on Saturday, December 2, 2-7 PM. Tickets are only $10.00/person, but if you nab a date, it's $15.00 for two tickets. Incidentally, this little shindig kicks off "Light Up Sanford" and that city's St. Lucia Festival.

Well, that's what's going on around town. Stay tuned for our next issue - we'll have the lowdown from Dr. Arthur Blumenthal, Director of the Cornell Fine Arts Museum, as well as another interview in our series on Rollins students and grads, when Jesse Wolfe shares some insights on post-college existence. (Jesse, as some of you may know, is a member of the local band, Little Giants, as well as part-owner of Federucci's Marketessen, which used to be the Marketessen, which used to be... oh never mind.)

Have a happy and safe Thanksgiving, and if you haven't seen it yet, go see "The Bear".

Joy of Reading

Jen Pitts

Finally, it's the weekend. Stressful isn't strong enough of an adjective to describe the kind of week it's been. Now that I finally have time to relax I think I'll read for a little bit. Yes, I did say read. No, I'm not talking about the kind of reading that you do for classes. Please, I'm not that sadistic. I'm talking about the kind of reading like magazines or fun books. Reading that doesn't require highlighter pens or for you to remember every little detail for an exam. Over the summer I learned how much I missed reading, and now I'm trying to get back into that frame of mind.

Before I started college I used to read often when I had free time. My first semester of college changed that. After spending hours reading textbooks and trying to memorize the important points, the idea of reading for pleasure went right out the window.

Instead of spending some of free time reading, I turned to the television. Yes, I became a t.v. junkie. This summer I didn't have a t.v., so I had to find something else to do. At first I panicked, then I remembered the good old library. I brushed the dust of the old public library card and headed to the library.

What a concept - walking into a library and not having to find information for a research paper! I could pick any book or magazine I wanted. I left the library with seven books that day and did so every week.

All summer I read. I devoured every book and magazine I could get my hands on, except T.V. Guide. It was wonderful just to sit down with a good book and relax. No highlighter pens, no notes, no worries about would such and such a character be on the test!

I really enjoyed the reading I got to do this summer, so I promised myself I wouldn't stop once I returned to Rollins. Obviously, I had lost a few brain cells this summer or I would have realized that it was easier said than done! For the first two months of school I was overwhelmed by all the reading I had to do for classes. After doing my work, I fell back into my old habit of watching t.v.

It wasn't until recently that I remembered what I had told myself before school started. I was attempting to clean my room when I came across some mystery novels that I read this summer. I sat down for a moment, and read bits and pieces of the books. Well, my room never got clean, but I had a great time reading.

"It's time for me to keep my promise," I said, so I headed to the bookstore to buy some magazines. It was a good idea to start with magazines because I started preparing myself to analyze the material before I read it. "O.K., keep in mind about the theme to this story, Jen," I'd say to myself and then I would start reading. Yep, there I was starting to find the theme in an article about the latest movie premiere in People magazine. Scary thought, isn't it? Well, after two seconds I came to my senses and began to read just for the sheer pleasure.

During some of my few free moments, I've been reading magazines and during Thanksgiving break I'll attempt to read my some mystery novels. If you need a way to relax, I highly recommend reading. Hey, you're off to a good start reading my article!

My Parents Are Puerto Rican and I Am Proud

Ann C. O'Neill

"Daddy, I have to tell you something that I know will upset you. I have a boyfriend."

"I see, And how old are you, young lady?"

"Twelve and a half."

"How many boyfriends are you going to have before you're married if you start now?"

"I don't know."

If this conversation sounds odd and unfamiliar, maybe it's because you didn't grow up in a Puerto Rican household with traditional Catholic parents. Needless to say, I did. They could never understand why girls liked boys or why girls would go out with someone if they were not contemplating marriage. This logic is typical of Hispanic parents.

My father was reared by his mother. She is a deeply religious woman who literally implanted in his mind that double standards for boys and girls should exist. It was not respectable for decent girls to go out unchaperoned. Boys, on the other hand, were given the freedom to behave according to their whims. You can see how my father would respond to a girl who had a liberal mind of her own.

My mother, now, was brought up by her aunt and grandmother. They were very strict with her when it came to going out with friends or having fun. Believe it or not, my mother got married to her first boyfriend, upon turning twenty. This boyfriend is my father today. They have been married for twenty-three years and can't understand why it doesn't work out the same way with all other couples.

I have often attempted to inform them of the difficulties involved with growing up and dealing with members of the opposite sex in the society I live in today.

"Mom, Ricky invited me to the movies tonight. Can I go?"

"Well, I don't know. Ask your father."

"Dad, Ricky invited me to the movies tonight. Can I go?"

"I don't know. Ask your mother."

This is ridiculous, neither of them want to decide, I thought to myself. Finally, they would discuss it: "Sweetie, I think you are too young to go to the movies alone with a boy. You can go with Paul (my brother)."

Can you believe that? What if Paul doesn't feel like tagging along. My parents decided I should take my little brother along, and even worse, I accept the fact that this is the only way I am going to be able to go out that night.

Ring, ring. "Hello. Ricky, I am sorry, but my parents will only let me go if I take along my little brother."

"Oh. Well, I guess it's okay. I'll pick you up at 6:00. Okay?"

"Okay. Bye."

It took me awhile, but I finally realized that they were making good decisions which were molding me into a morally conscientious human being. Even though I still become angered by their regulations, I am extremely proud to have conservative Hispanic parents who love me enough to abide by what their parents, and now they, believe to be right.

I feel confident I, too, will commit to their high Puerto Rican standards when I become a parent. It actually feels as though I will somehow be promoting my Spanish heritage, and my pride in it, for future generations.

A Glimpse of a Different World

Ann C. O'Neill

I am wearing the most comfortable shoes in the whole world, my new brown suede Indian moccasins. What I find exciting about them is that they were made by hand (Indian hands!) Since I was very young I've had an obsession with being an Indian princess.

Last weekend I had the opportunity to engage in an opportunity to engage in a great experience with a group of Indians at the Orlando Powwow. It took place on the Central Florida Fairgrounds. There was alligator wrestling, dancing, many other Indian customs, and a display of Indian Art. There were so many Indians around I couldn't help observing their every expression.

After having looked through the program for a few seconds, I noticed a picture of Tina Osceola, a Rollins graduate. It made the event even more touching, knowing she was one of the head dancers for the weekend.

Probably the best part of the Powwow took place during the night. Rollins College students, in addition to others, were invited to share an evening with the Indians. They all camped out together which turned out to be a fruitful experience for all those who had the opportunity to spend the night.

During that weekend, I had my first taste of "fry bread." Upon tasting it I realized it was similar to an island treat called johnny cake. Unfortunately, I did not enjoy the fry bread, but took great pleasure in discovering a similarity between American Indian dishes, and those of the Carib Indians.

Another insight I had that weekend was finding the American Indian arts extremely similar to those of the South American Indians. These crafts, although not exactly identical, can be paralleled very nicely. One area of distinct difference in their arts was found in the jewelry. The South American Indians work much more with beads and wire, whereas the American Indians seem to set turquoise, red coral, and other shells in silver jewelry more often than their bead work.

I could spend a week looking at all the arts, crafts, and jewelry that were displayed by each individual group of Indian vendors. The experience was definitely an enriching one. I became much more culturally aware of the existence of the American Indians, and I could not help but feel a little sad about their past.

Suddenly, I discovered a sense of pride in the American Indians. They had maintained their culture despite great odds. They are beautiful people, with a beautiful culture, and have a great deal to offer mankind.

"They did me proud"

"They did me proud," said Rollins sailing coach Bud Morrow as his sailors made a clean sweep at the Wild Turkey Regatta in Gainesville. Rollins took first or second in every category despite some alleged juggling of the matchups according to Morrow. The sailors took first in "A" Division, first in "B" Division, first and second in Sunfish and first and second in sailboards. Mary Pelham, a freshman from Jenkintown, Pa. was voted most outstanding sailor by her teammates as she won 7 out of 10 races in the Sunfish Division. She is a Pre-med major.

First-round proves unlucky

Three Rollins players competed in the Rolex Collegiate Regionals in Tallahassee this past weekend. Jenny Miller, Leslie Jones, and Miki Rakovic, and, unfortunately, all were defeated in the first round. Rakovic and Jones competed in doubles as well. Coach Bev Buckley played in the Les Grandes Dames Tournament at Heathrow this past weekend. She and her partner were defeated in the doubles semifinals.

Lady Tars place fourth

The Lady Tar golfers finished a credible 4th at the Lady Blazer Invitational in Birmingham this past weekend. South Alabama won the event, followed by Memphis State, Ole Miss, and Rollins. Sarah Johnson was 10th overall, Debbie Pappas 21st, Nicole Hollett 26th, Torey Doney 27th, and Debbie Mollis 30th.

Lady Tars Break Most Wins Record

1989 season record of 33-9

1987 mark of 32-10 with Stetson win

by Rissa Andres

With less than a week left in the season, the Lady Tars volleyball team looks to close the season with a big conference win. The Tars will face top-ranked Florida Southern who is undefeated thus far in conference play, this Thursday evening. The win would be a great way for Rollins to finish the year.

Last Wednesday Rollins traveled to Stetson and beat the Hatters quite easily in four games, but the Tars had beaten Stetson earlier this season in just three. Coach Patterson was happy with the win and said the team had played well.

Senior Jaci Wozniak was named Sunshine State Conference Player of the Week. Patterson commented on how well she has been playing and labeled Wozniak as "a great motivator." Wozniak, along with fellow teammate Falecia Douglas, was named to the all tournament team from last week's tourney in West Georgia.

Friday night the Tars tried to recapture a tie in the conference with Tampa as they faced the Spartans in a tough away match. Rollins played a much better game than they had when they faced Tampa here, but the effort still wasn't enough. The Tars lost in three games.

Patterson commented that the team might have been a little intimidated by Tampa, who hasn't lost to Rollins for quite some time. She also noted that Rollins lacks players who can play both front and back court, and that hurt when she was looking to substitute players. Patterson said Tampa had more players who could play in all positions, which greatly benefitted them.

So - phomore standout Anna Penry still hasn't played for the Tars since she hurt her ankle a few weeks ago. Patterson hopes to have her back this week when they face Florida Southern, a team that is currently first in conference play and ranked tenth in Division II volleyball. This game, which will be played November 16 at the Enyart Alumni Fieldhouse, is the Tars' last home game of the season and it is also senior night.

Rollins will play at St. Leo Tuesday night.

Miami 31, NY Jets 23

Miami rallied from a 17-point second quarter deficit to defeat the Jets to remain one game behind division leading Buffalo. Dan Marino, who threw two first half interceptions, warmed up in the second half, throwing two touchdown passes for 78 and 65 yards. In the second quarter, Miami kicker Pete Stovonovich kicked a 59 yard field goal, the third longest in history.

Phoenix 24, Dallas 20

Tom Tupa replaced Gary Hogeboom at quarterback to help the Cardinals beat the Cowboys. Tupa put up 17 fourth quarter points to rally the Cardinals, including the game winning 72-yard touchdown pass to Ernie Jones with less than a minute left. Troy Aikman, who was sidelined six weeks ago, took over the quarterback job and completed 21 of 40 passes for 379 yards and two touchdowns, including a 75 yard pass with 1:43 left, which gave Dallas the lead momentarily. Phoenix improved their record to 5-5 and Dallas dropped to 1-9.

LA Rams 31, NY Giants 10

Jim Everett completed 23 of 33 passes for 295 yards and two touchdowns and Greg Bell ran for two touchdowns to lead the Rams over the Giants. With the win, the Rams ended a four game losing streak and ended the Giants four game winning streak. The Rams' defense contributed by holding the Giants to six yards total rushing and sacked Phil Simms four times.

New Orleans 28, N. England 24

New Orleans jumped out to a 28-10 halftime lead and managed to hold off a late fourth quarter rally as the Saints improved to 5-5. Dalton Hilliard ran for 106 yards on 28 carries to help the Saints take advantage of three second quarter turnovers which eventually led to 21 points. Steve Grogan had a bad day only completing 27 of 59 attempts but helped the Patriots score two touchdowns in the last five minutes.

1989-90 Tars and Lady Tars Basketball Preview

Up in the northern portion of the United States, the cool autumn breeze begins to bring with it a little more punch as October fades into November. That punch begins to feel more like a Mike Tyson wallop as turkey's begin to take cover. Finally, Tyson winds up and delivers a hook that knocks Fall cold—allowing the wrath of winter to spring free.

In order to escape this wrath of blustering 50 m.p.h. winds, below 30 degree Fahrenheit weather, and ice-slicked roads, smart Northerners take cover. Indoors is the place to be.

Well, with winter almost as powerful as Pee Wee Herman in Florida, what could possibly drive the inhabitants of Rollins College indoors?

Give up? The 1989-90 Men's and Women's Basketball Teams. The season opens up for both teams this week with exhibition games. This special sports section is a preseason look at the Blue and Gold and what it promises to have in store for its fans. So sports fans, get ready for some Enyart-Alumni Fieldhouse basketball action—coming your way...soon.

Consistency the Key

Tars could "surprise some people" if they put it all together and take one game at a time

by Keith Boeck

Although the 14 members of the Tars basketball team had just finished an hour of drills, a scrimmage with game intensity, and countless sprints, they didn't drag off the court this time. Like always, their muscles still ached, sweat still drenched their uniforms, and some still gasped for air, but this time the team left all smiles. No killers had to be run today. They had successfully avoided those post practice runs by nailing 12 of 13 free throws.

Along with this momentary sense of good feeling, an overall feeling of relaxation has been with the Tars throughout the preseason. Sure, there are times of pressure—in fact Coach Tom Klusman purposely adds that dimension by creating game situations in practice—but the atmosphere isn't one of continual stress.

Why? Because this year the Tars have not laid out concrete goals for their season. There was no "We will win the conference and finish 20-8" written on the blackboard at a team meeting. Instead, the Tars have chosen another route to success: worrying about themselves.

"Our goal is to play the best we can each and every game," said Klusman. "We're not worried about other teams, we're worried about ourselves. We want to play to our top level. If the team we're playing is better and they play to their top level, they are going to beat us. There is nothing we can do besides play our best."

But better teams don't always play to their top level.

"And that's where we want to capitalize," said Klusman. "If we catch a team down, we've got to play to our ability to win."

The 1989-90 season won't see the Tars ranked in the Sunshine State Conference better than fourth. With perennial powers Florida Institute of Technology and Florida Southern ranked #2 and #4 respectively in the NCAA II pre-season poll, the league is solid.

"The bottom three teams in our league have gotten better," said Klusman, "and the top three teams have done nothing to hurt themselves."

It's possible that the Tars may even be ranked fifth or sixth in the conference. But Klusman believes that this could be a good position to be in.

"I think this team will come out and surprise some people," he said.

The Tars return seniors Sam Arterburn and Andy Holman along with juniors Scott Martin, Cameron Forbes, Terry North, Mike Reeves, and Ralph Fabian.

Arterburn is a 6-6 forward who was named to the SSC Honorable Mention team. Last year, he led the team in rebounding (6.3 per game), and was second only to Dan Wolf in scoring with 16.6 points per game.

Forbes, a 6-6 forward, had 9.7 points per game and 4.8 rebounds per game last year, but a back injury has unfortunately slowed him down over the summer. After getting back into the swing of things the past couple of weeks, Forbes is 100% healthy.

Holman is the other forward returning to the Tar lineup. He scored 4.4 points and recorded 2.6 rebounds per game last year.

The Tars have the potential to be strong down low, but at times don't go all out.

"I like this ball club. I have a group of fine young men who try to do what I ask," said Klusman. "But sometimes my bigguys don't come to the gym ready to play."

If anything, that is what this Tar team needs to improve to put out on the court a competitive team—consistency.

"We are stronger, more powerful, and more experienced this year. But we are not as consistent as we could be," said Klusman. "A lot of this season is up to the individual. What I think this team could be is very good. We have a very good offensive and defensive team and can rebound. I've

Fresh New Blood

Lady Tars starting fresh with 7 of 13 freshman on team; as they try to defend SSC title

by Kate Backes

The Rollins' Women's basketball team is in the midst of a transition stage—or maybe more appropriately termed—a transfusion stage, as seven freshmen have been called upon to supply the Tars with the greatest quantity of fresh new blood they've seen in a long time.

The 1989-90 Tars are merely a shadow of last year's Sunshine State Conference Champions. Gone is four-time All-American Kim Tayrien and SSC Honorable Mention Kirsten Dellinger. Gone, in fact, are eight-letter winners, including three starters that pushed the Tars to the top of the pack last season. In their place are seven freshmen, three sophomores, and three juniors. How can this year's team even compare with last year's success? How can any team survive without the leadership of at least one senior? Are this year's Lady Tars doomed for the doldrums of the SSC dungeon?

Absolutely, positively, undeniable not, comes the response from head coach Glenn Wilkes, Jr., "we'll be young, but competitive right off the bat, and by mid-season we'll be a really strong team."

One should not forget that although the Tars lost three starters to graduation last year, two will be returning to the court this season in the form of junior guard Carissa Andres and sophomore guard Kathy Warner.

Andres earned First-Team All-SSC honors last year while averaging 13.3 points and 5.0 rebounds. She was also named to the SSC All-Academic Team, sporting a 3.4 GPA, and in January was named SSC Athlete of the Week.

Warner was named to the All-SSC Freshman Team her first season at Rollins and was also ranked third in the SSC in assists. In addition she gained academic honors as a member of the SSC-Academic team and as a permanent fixture on the President's and Dean's list as well.

Also bringing their talent and experience back this year are sophomore

Lasher, who made the All-SSC Freshman Team during her first full season at Rollins, brings back her exceptional shooting prowess. Last year she led the team in field-goal and free-throw percentages with 50.5% and 82.2% respectively. In addition she was tops in free throws in the SSC and ranked third in the SSC in both shooting categories.

In her first year for the Lady Tars, Tammy Lewis proved herself to be a quick guard and rugged defender. Seeing action in thirteen games last year, Lewis averaged 5.9 points and 3.5 rebounds and had an impressive five steals versus the University of Central Florida.

Two juniors return to the team this year, in the forms of Leslie Hudson and Janice Abaray. The 5-11 Hudson has served as back-up to All-American Kim Tayrien the past two years and is now looking forward to stepping in to a more permanent position. She has seen action in all but two games over the past two seasons and last year averaged 4.8 points and 2.9 rebounds. She has also been a two-time selection to the All-SSC Academic Team.

Abaray comes on after sitting out last season. In her freshman year she played in fourteen games and averaged 1.4 points with five assists and four steals.

Wilkes is confident with his returning players, however he acknowledges that there will definitely be some pressure on them to pick up the slack with the great graduation losses. "There's no question that there's 35-40 points that they're going to have to come up with, but I'm really comfortable with the players this year, and I think Kendra's really ready to step in and take a lot of the scoring load that Kim Tayrien had," said Wilkes.

The Lady Tars have no captains to speak of as of yet, and Wilkes is not so sure seen spurts of it throughout the preseason. But I haven't seen it all put together yet."

One thing Klusman seems to be very confident in is his guards.

"I've got some really good guards this year," said Klusman. "They give me the best they've got out there everyday."

Klusman feels that he is in better shape this year at the guard position than last year's 16-16 (4-4 SSC record) team.

"Experience there (at guard) can dictate games. Last year, our inexperience at the guard position hurt us," he said. "This year, our guards can handle the ball better."

Martin returns at guard after a solid season which included 116 assists and 12.5 points per game.

He will possibly be flanked by freshman Derek Thurston, from Alexandria, Indiana. At Monroe High School, Thurston was named MVP twice and is the school career leader in assists and steals.

What's best about Derek is that he "does whatever the situation calls for," said Klusman. "Derek doesn't make many mistakes—he plays a lot older than a freshman."

The freshman crop this year, has been especially impressive, and have had a positive influence on the Tars this year.

"They have made the upperclass work harder," said Klusman, "because they know the freshman are good."

According to Klusman, David Wolf, Dennis Hall, and Chad Phelps all have a great shot at starting sometime in their careers.

Klusman, beginning his 10th season as coach of the Tars, will be assisted by Kyle Frakes and Steve Melgrad.

The season opens on November 17, Friday, with an exhibition game against Ryerson Tech, a team from Canada, at 7:30 P.M. Then on Tuesday (Nov. 21), the Tars regular season begins with a 7:30 P.M. game against Monmouth.

that this relatively young team will utilize this option this year, "Right now, I'm not sure if we'll have captains," he said, "I'm just waiting for somebody to step forward and be a leader."

As for the freshmen on the team, Wilkes remains somewhat mysterious, and will not divulge just what freshman, (or freshmen) may find themselves starting this season. Of course there is a veritable reason for this, as Wilkes explained, "I like 'em all. I know right now we're only a week away from our first game, but I still don't have a starting line-up."

"They are going to have to grow up pretty quick though."

-Coach Glenn Wilkes Jr.

It's easy to see why Wilkes is having trouble with his line-up card, for in addition to the returning talent, these seven incoming freshmen look quite impressive, if only on paper.

The freshmen include, Stephanie Brown, a 5-8 guard from Tennessee who averaged six points her freshman year and is, according to Wilkes, "one of the best defensive players I've ever seen."

Kim Dishon, a 5-11 center from Detroit, Michigan who averaged a superhuman 18 ppg and 18 rebounds at Woodhaven High School in addition to being named one of Michigan's top 100 players by the Detroit Free Press. Ellen O'Day, a 6-1 center from Springfield, Virginia, who averaged 14 points, 7 rebounds and 4.6 blocked shots her senior year and was named All-District her last two years of high school; Kelley Reale, a 5-11 forward from Rockland, Massachusetts who averaged 16.1 points and 15 rebounds and was named three times an All-League and All-Region All-Star; Jennifer Tufford, a 5-9 guard from Longwood, Florida, who was an All-Conference selection her junior year and played on the 1987 AAU State Championship team; Deanna Ward, a 5-9 guard from Jacksonville, Florida, who averaged 23.8 points per game and was named MVP and Athlete of the Year at Bolles High School, and Priscilla Witten, a 5-7 guard from Pahokee, Florida who in addition to being the fastest player on the Rollins team this year was a four-year letter winner in high school averaging 15 points, 4 rebounds and 4 assists.

Although the resemblance between this season's Lady Tars and last year's championship squad is sketchy, Wilkes is still positive about the 89-90 season, "With the freshman we've got we're pretty talented, they're going to have to grow up pretty quick though. This year we're going to focus on the Sunshine State Conference games, because by the time we get to conference play we will have played about ten or twelve games and we should be used to each other and have things pretty much ironed out."

According to Wilkes, the Tars toughest SSC opponents will be Barry, Eckerd, and FIT, however that's not to overlook their first home game of the season, this Saturday, the 18th, against Valdosta State, "our opening game against Valdosta is probably going to be our toughest game," said Wilkes.

However with their returning veterans and the supply of some much needed fresh new blood, the Lady Tars should fair well in their opening match as well as in the rest of their season—however until Coach Wilkes gets his line-up card filled out they won't be going anywhere.

Klusman Praises Incredible Fan Support from Students

by Keith Boeck

If talent, desire, and consistency are the most important elements for a successful basketball season, listed close to next would have to be—the fans.

"They mean just as much," said Klusman. "Rollins' fan support has been invaluable in the past. I hope they continue that support this year."

"We have gotten such great support from the students, and sometimes we forget that," said Klusman. "I just want them to know that they are greatly appreciated. We rise to a higher level playing at home, because of our fans."
