WELCOME

Letters from the editors to the class of 2017

Dear Incoming Freshmen (I mean First Years),

Welcome to Rollins College, also known as Rolly Colly, Rollins Country Club, and your new home for the next four years. After browsing College Prowler, perhaps noticing our high ranking on the latest "Most Beautiful Schools" list, and chatting with fellow First Years on the Class of 2017 Facebook group, you're here! By now you have an idea of what you've gotten yourself into. Rollins is everything you've read, but it's also more: it's a surprisingly diverse community, it's a beautiful campus full of beautiful people (not just looks, of course), and you're going to learn a lot. You'll do just as much of it outside of the classroom as inside. You'll leave in four years with stories, friends, and a solid academic foundation. But let's not talk about graduation, let's talk about you, right now. My advice? Relax. Try new things. You've made it, and it's only getting better from here.

- Mary Catherine Pflung
Production Editor

New Rollins student, At last, you have made it to college. You have said your good-byes to your parents, traded skype addresses with your friends, and have perhaps even bid au du to your high school sweet heart. In a nutshell, you are in for some big changes.

I would be lying if I claimed that each and every moment of freshman year is going to be chocked full of excitement and bliss; in reality a lot of it is going to be pretty rough. You will probably get locked out of your dorm room, at least twice, without your phone. It is also likely you will end up taking care of a drunk stranger in the bathroom late on a Saturday night. Getting called on in class to answer a question about the reading you forgot to do is also a common First Year occurrence. Just roll with the punches, though, because by the time sophomore year rolls around, you can sit back and call yourself a seasoned Rollins professional.

The next few weeks will steadfastly become a blur of new faces, memorable experiences and a ton of time consuming homework assignments. Once the awkward introductory games have ceased and your class schedule becomes second nature, can you finally begin to relax and truly call yourself a college student. Freshman year will fly by, so do yourself a favor and don't sweat the small stuff.

PS. Get to know your professors, they have amazing things to say and want to see you succeed.

FIRST YEAR PROBLEMS

Freshman year survivor and current Sophomore student, Garcia offers incoming Class of 2017 tips and tricks on how to succeed academically and socially.

Stephanie Garcia

Assistant Section Editor

The golden rule of surviving freshman year is acceptance: accept late night study sessions and feeling overwhelmed with work — especially during finals. Accept the inevitable truth that you will feel homesick, at one time or another. Above all, accept feeling lost and clueless, because you are.

Remember that time management is a needed skill — not a voluntary issue. Whether you are involved with several clubs, play a sport, or have a part-time job, your obligations will conflict, and that is okay. Take a deep breath, and accept that freshman year is, and will be, an adjustment.

Reflecting on my freshman year, I am going to reveal some classified information on surviving your first year of college. First off, it is impossible to breeze through college; challenges will come in one shape or another. Second, get involved with something — whether it is joining The Sandspur or going clubbing with your roommates every Thursday, from the debate team to LASA, Rollins Relief to Greek life, there is an extracurricular niche for everyone. Lastly, do not be a hermit — With students from all over the world, you are bound to meet someone decent — maybe even a friend.

As far as food goes, you will eventually get sick of the campus Center menu. No fear, Park Avenue is here. Though lagged with tourists, Park Avenue offers a variety of restaurants within walking distance. When needed, please your taste buds and take a bite out of some BurgerFi fries or Panullo's marionetti. However, do so cautiously. These venues can hurt the piggy bank when used excessively, so indulge in moderation.

Besides strolling along Park

Avenue, explore the rest of Florida when you have the chance: Disney World, Universal, and Downtown Orlando are just a few options when discovering what Central Florida has to offer. With performance venues like Sak Comedy Lab and Orlando Shakespeare Theater, indoor options for a weekend hangout are also nearby.

Freshman year is the year of newfound responsibility. You will be your alarm clock for class and motivator when juggling assignments. Most importantly, guard your R-card. It is the key to your room and your means of purchasing on-campus food. Protect your R-card and try not to lose it; a new one will cost you $15. Furthermore, if you feel the need to let loose and drink with friends, do so responsibly and discretely. If you decide to drink in your dorm, be smart and do not get caught.

Now, let me dissect the RCC — the obligatory course that all freshmen are subject to complete. Be prepared for spending a lot of time with your Peer Mentors, Advisor, and classmates this fall — especially during orientation. Towards the end of the semester, your mandatory RCC events will seem meaningless and a bit excessive; face it, some events are more beneficial than others.

Regarding your other courses, speak up and take initiative; with a student to professor ratio of 10:1, being shy in class is not an option. Also, rent or purchase books online to save money; the book store should always be a last resort.

Finally, no one has a perfect or stress-free year, whether you are a senior or a freshman. Don't be afraid to ask for advice; your peer mentor is a phone call away and a fellow freshman is probably on your dorm room floor. Let the memories begin and have a great year, Class of 2017.

Sexpert

The art of dorm sex

As you settle in at college, you'll find dorm sex is an unavoidable and hopefully enjoyable part of your Rollins experience. A Sexpert shows you how to do it right without causing a ruckus.

David Matteson

Head of Design

Welcome freshmen, to your sexual awakening.

Sex at college is one of the oldest clichés. Free of the burden of parental supervision, you will surely feel the need to open new sexual doors and discover the intimate side of yourself. However, sex at college is far from the romanticized experiences that you have dreamed of. Surely you've noticed that your extended twin mattress are not meant to house two bodies, hell for some of you it won't even support your body. Further, the incessant smell of vomit that plagues McKean hall is hardly the romantic aroma you are craving. Not to mention the door alarm in Ward which seems to always go off right before you or your partner climax.

Yet despite these factors, Rollins students continue to have sex in their dorms, finding one way or another to make it work. So, before you are bored by the never-ending orientation speeches that you are about to sit through, read this Sexpert's tips for having dorm sex.

Sexile the Roommate- The majority of you have roommates (for those of you lucky enough to be in a single you may end up sleeping in a double at some point so continue reading), and thus having sex in the dorms presents an additional problem: what to do with the roommate? Despite Res Life's best intentions to match up candidates, it seems that every room ends up with a virgin and a nymphomaniac expected to coexist in tight quarters (especially in Ward, i.e. honors housing). Thus it becomes key to sit your roommate down and discuss what to do when you're planning on having a sleepover.

Sexiling, is the practice of kicking your roommate out so that you and your date can do the dirty. There are proper ways to sexile, along with horror stories of roommates being woken and thrown out at four in the morning. Don't be that guy, no one likes that guy except for slutty girls. Simply set up a schedule of when you both are willing to leave the room. Having an open conversation about sex is the first step towards a healthy roommate relationship.

Moan Quietly- It is unacceptable to wake up to the sound of banging walls and moaning. Your neighbors do not care if you haven't had sex in three weeks and you just have to get it on. No sympathy will be given. Instead, neighbors often bang on the walls right back, which really puts a damper on the mood. Or, if you're lucky enough to have an RA as your neighbor, he or she might be so bold as to knock on your door and make sure you're using a condom.

So if you simply must be loud, take this advice for having quiet kinky sex. The first step, after the roommate is out of the room, is to move the mattress onto the floor. This is important, as it will give you more room and a far less severe fall if one of you should be tossed from the bed. It also prevents the headboard and bed springs from making awful screeching noises.

To prevent loud moaning try to keep your partner quiet. Some of my girl friends have reported that guys have pressed their hands to their mouths or even slapped them to keep from being heard through the paper-thin walls. While some people may enjoy this, most are not into kinky gag-and-bound sex, so it becomes important to simply remind your partner verbally to keep quiet.

Cuddle Buddies- Oh the joys of twin beds. It is nearly impossible to fit two people on these teeny tiny mattresses, thus the only way to cuddle post-sex is to assume a spooning position. Be prepared that you will wake up with a strained neck and back. Of course, most of my sexcapades in the dorms were further heightened by the joy of having sore muscles the next day.

That being said, don't use cramped quarters as an excuse to throw a girl or guy out after you both have come. That's just rude. Simply suck it up and have ibuprofen on hand to heal your aching pains the next morning.

Overall, dorm sex is difficult and requires flexibility, agility and the ability to communicate with your roommate and partner. It will also be some of the most memorable sex of your life. So as you paddle through your weekend of welcoming speeches, rules and regulations, look forward to the fact that sex is surely on the horizon.

Dining Guide to Orlando

When you have a case of the munchies, dining at one of the mainstream restaurants on Park Ave is not the only alternative to the typical Campus Center cuisine: a local buger joint proves to be a hidden gem.

B&B Junction

Winter Park

You'd think with both BurgerFi and 310 on Park Avenue, Rollins students would be pretty covered in terms of their burger needs. Both might soon become obsolete; the new burger joint, B&B Junction, makes them both look like highway rest-stop Burger Kings. Located where 4Rivers used to be, the restaurant has been transformed by the new owners into a health and ecologically-minded taste-stomper with some of the best burgers, fries, wings and smoothies I've ever tasted. It's worth the lengthy walk, bike, or five minute drive—you have to check this place out.

B&B Junction offers a "farm-to-table" approach, meaning that if it's on the menu, it's locally grown or made and 100% organic. Those wary after watching documentaries like Food Inc. will love this place. They have a map showing where all of their meat, cheese and produce comes from around Florida and some of the stuff on their menu is insane. Last time I went, I had their spicy burger, which had, amongst other things, ghost chili cheese and roasted poblano-bacon jam on it. I sometimes catch myself longingly looking out windows thinking about my next rendezvous with my new love. But I digress.

The menu is loaded with a variety of options: almost a dozen different traditional burgers (big ones too, not those two-mouthfuls that BurgerFi tries to sell as "satisfying"), another dozen alternative burgers (such as turkey, chicken and vegetarian), hot wings with two alternate sauces, and a plethora of different fries, such as sweet potato, salt and pepper, chili, and Portobello mushroom fries (which I tried and immediately experienced nirvana upon first bite). They have a host of unique and enticing beers and their homemade sorbet smoothies are incredible. Everything has a unique taste to it and you can tell how much care and preparation goes into each meal. After my first visit, it immediately became my new favorite restaurant in Winter Park.

It's casual, delicious, filling, inexpensive and healthy. If it was open 24/7 it'd be the god of college-town restaurants. Do your tongue and belly a favor and haul yourself over to B&B Junction. My recommendation: get the Portobello mushroom fries and the mango-sorbet smoothie. You'll have a food high for the rest of the day.

PICK UP

Lynx bus 102 picks up right next to Keke's Breakfast Café, across the street from Ethos. Walk down past the Fairbanks building and Shipyard Brewery. Cross the street both directions. On weekdays, 102 arrives every 15 minutes, on the weekends every 30 minutes. There are a few other buses that stop nearby, but 102 gets you to downtown Orlando and the Lynx Central Station (LCS) where you can transfer to

DROP OFF

Lynx 102 drops off across from Chase Bank, up New York Avenue (the street beside Ethos). Pull the string on the side of the bus once the bus crosses the railroad tracks or passes Fiddler's Pub, whichever you notice first. Make sure your check your return times at the station or on the Lynx bus website, as the 102 stops early on Saturdays and Sundays (<http://www.golynx.com/>).

By Annamarie Carlson

Welcome to the theme park capital of the world! You are attending college in the middle of central Florida, just steps away from Walt Disney World, Universal Studios, Sea World, countless malls and outlet centers, and the International Drive tourist trap. One problem: most of you don't have a car.

Some of you will be lucky; you will quickly make friends with upperclassmen with vehicles or you will end up being roommates with one of the magical freshmen that fit one of the multitude of exceptions that allow them to bring a car to campus.

For those of you that are not so lucky, you are either looking at piles of expensive cab receipts or sticking around Winter Park during your first (and possibly subsequent) years. How do you solve this problem? I present to you the joys of public transportation: the LYNX bus system.

I will warn you up front: it is not always convenient. It is time consuming. Unfortunately, you can't use the buses to get to the beach.

However, if you can deal with spending some time staring out a bus window (or completing readings for your classes), you have landed on a gold mine. Forget gas, insurance, and mechanic's bills and welcome to getting where you need to go for $2 one direction, $5 a day maximum.

If you do get stuck downtown, it is only a $15 cab ride back to Rollins, and any cab company you call will know the Lynx Central Station. When waiting for a cab at night, stay alert and stay on the opposite side of the station from where the buses drop off.

Tips: Make sure you keep aware of your surroundings at all times, particularly at the Lynx Central Station. The first time you ride any route, ride during the daytime with a buddy.

Know your route ahead of time. Bus drivers and people riding are not always helpful. Know what stops are a few before the one you want to get off at and a few after. Know the streets leading up to your stop, as the buses do not always announce each stop before arrival. Check out Google Maps; it shows all of the bus routes, making it easy to know exactly where your bus is going at all times.

I have used the Lynx Bus System for the last three years, and I have never had a problem. They are cheap, easy to use, and give me extra time to do my homework before arriving wherever I want to go.

Make sure to check out www.golynx.com/ for more information!
