REMBERT WALLACE PATRICK

A BIBLIOGRAPHY

Compiled by Edward K. Eckert

The following bibliography is an attempt to bring together all of Rembert W. Patrick's published works in one place convenient to scholars. The list is complete through December 1, 1967. Little attempt has been made to note unpublished works, among which are comments and papers delivered at various historical meetings, including the paper, "The Florida Historical Quarterly," given at the annual meeting of the Florida Historical Society in St. Augustine, April 13, 1956. It should be noted that Professor Patrick was general editor of the twenty-one volumes in the Floridiana Facsimile & Reprint Series, published by the University of Florida Press, beginning in 1962.

Professor Patrick's contribution to southern historiography is large. As virtually the first scholar to penetrate the history of Florida, Patrick's works will remain for many years the foundation for all further efforts. At the same time that he was studying Florida history, Professor Patrick maintained his strong interest in the Civil War-Reconstruction period. His Ph. D. dissertation written at the University of North Carolina was published as Jefferson Davis and his Cabinet and his last book was The Reconstruction of the Nation, released shortly before his death. As an early harbinger of the necessity for social change in the South, Patrick's articles and speeches on the racial question in the 1950s marked him as an intellectual leader of the contemporary liberal mind in the South. Finally, through his numerous book reviews, Patrick was able to constantly criticize and comment upon the historiography of the South.
