"They set tangible goals and achieved the vast majority of them and did a great job delivering for the student body," said Sarah Oleksy, the assistant director of UCF Housing & Residence Life. UCF uses YouTube to spread campus news locally and nationally

KARI WILBERG
Tallahassee

UCF has been moving toward the technological side of things since it created its very own YouTube Web site.

The site, created in 2006, has received more than 2,600 views and features more than 100 videos, Christine Dolcer of UCF News and Information said.

Dolcer said UCF on YouTube is about giving access to people locally and around the country and most recently has been used to inform students about meningitis.

"The YouTube channel provides the university with another great avenue to advance its reputation by educating and researching out countless numbers of people," Dolcer said. "You can, for example, learn about the new College of Medicine evening accreditation, listen to speeches by Nobel Prize winners or find out about on-campus resources to protect against meningitis.

In addition to these videos, Jesse Wolfe, a lecturer in the film department, said students applying for the bachelor of fine arts degree in film are required to submit their applications completely online.

Wolfe said part of this application included uploading a video onto YouTube. He said YouTube makes viewing applications easier on faculty members because they can do it when they have time.

He said this was the first year they required students to upload their videos.

Wolfe said more than 300 people apply and each application is viewed by four members of the faculty review board. This review board decides which 30 applicants are admitted to the film school.

Wolfe said before applicants uploaded their videos onto YouTube, faculty members were confined to cubicles and had to watch 35 to 60 videos apiece.

"In addition to being easier, it is more cost efficient," Wolfe said.

"One, it saves postage, if nothing else," he said. "It also saves a lot of administration costs and saves a lot of time professors can devote to their other duties.

Wolfe said professors are stretched thin because of the financial crisis Florida is in. He said anything that frees up professors' time only helps the school.

The applicants' videos are not visible to the general public. He said students follow YouTube instructions and take the URL YouTube creates and put it into their applications.

Wolfe said this actually helps convince students get accepted for the film program. He said students should know how to upload a video onto YouTube, and if not, they are not ready for the program.

Wolfe said UCF is also being incorporated into the classroom.

"I know we are very soon to have a class taught on YouTube," Wolfe said. "It wouldn't be surprising if it's before the decade is out.

Kevin Yee, an adjunct professor in the English department and Honors College, said YouTube works well as a quick engagement exercise in the classroom.

"The way it is used as a teacher myself is mostly to introduce topics and introduce new concepts in an easy way," Yee said.

In his honors literature class about fairy tales, he said he has shown clips from Deepen House as ways to bring relevance and entertainment to topics that may otherwise be dry and academic. He said this can help turn students on to topics they would want to discuss.

Yee said he has been using YouTube in his classrooms for only six months but knew about it before.

"I had known of it and used it for years," Yee said. "But I did not make the connection it would be a great teaching tool.

Yee said in addition to teaching, his job is to help faculty members think of different teaching techniques and strategies. He said he makes people aware of different strategies for using YouTube in the classroom.

"Videos and online distribution is the Wild West of the film industry," Wolfe said. "YouTube is the next natural step."

UCF’s slide halted by superb pitching

By BRIAN MURPHY

Just when the UCF Baseball team was about to fall off the edge of relevancy in 2018, it was saved by two pitchers: a sophomore and one senior — who turned in dominant performances against the Knights’ two biggest rivals.

The Knights (23-7 overall, 8-3 in Conference USA) snapped a seven-game losing skid Tuesday when they beat South Florida 6-3 behind freshman pitcher Cody Allen, Junior pitcher Mitch Herold was just as good the following night in a 4-1 victory over Houston.

Herold went all nine innings for UCF’s first complete game since 2016. Herold was able to last that long because he pitched like he had a plane to catch.

Herold has had problems with his control in the past but on Wednesday he threw three times fewer pitches to 17 batters, allowed one walk and was very economical with his nine strikeouts, which tied a career high.

“When he is in the strike zone, he’s very effective,” UCF pitching coach Greg Cantart said about Herold. “I think he is slowly but surely getting to the pose where he has the confidence, and he has the ability to feel the middle of the plate when he needs to. There’s no doubt about his stuff, so let’s hope things continue in that direction.”

Herold never really got into trouble in any inning, he allowed just two runners to reach second base, and he shut out two batters in the ninth inning after walking Jeremy Cruz.

In the bottom of the third, Snapp walked with the bases loaded, and the Knights added their second run of the game when Tiffany McClain opened the third, singles up the middle, scoring Snapp from third to give the Knights the 2-0 lead.

With live shuffle raffles and free Southern Comfort promotions, the bar is currently accepting a few people or a small group of people.

Laura Donnelly, a junior at UK, said that she has been coming to the bar since it opened a little over a year ago in January.

"It is a very tiny, beautiful bar in town," Donnelly said. "It is a hot spot that is not only busy but is definitely more relaxed.

-- END --
People— which wouldn't you know it, played at Sundance earlier this year— can't help but come off as a derivative of so many films before it. Dennis Quaid plays a misanthropic, professor-verse-widow anxiously waiting for his manuscript to get published; Ellen Page is his sardonic, overachieving and under-educated daughter; Thomas Haden Church turns up as his mellow adopted brother; and Sarah Jessica Parker manages to be a former student, current doctor and potential love interest to Quaid simultaneously.

Page and Church tend to present of finest hour Mark Polish's choice zingers, but their welcome rapport tends to taper off toward the film's second half, where personal conflict and inevitable changes of heart come into tedious play (as one character puts it, the film "rambles like a bad Kirk song!"). If you really want to spend your time and money with a couple of spectacularly cardboardy academic freshmen fumbling middle-class, the intellectuals of these ways. The Scoop, The Split and The Whole and Wonder Women are all waiting in the wings.
