Wrestling Team third at nationals

JULIAN KNOTT

After an impressive win in its conference championship, the UCF Wrestling Team placed third at nationals. The team won the National Collegiate Wrestling Association Southeast Region Championship by 48 points and was qualified in the Southeast Conference Championship to move on to nationals, where the team appeared from first to 15 points.

UCF hosted nationals at the Lakeland Civic Center. "It was nice to be able to bring the team to Florida," assistant coach Jason Belenski said.

Belenski was also announced Coach of the Year. "It was an extreme honor to be selected for this award," Balma said, "especially considering it is voted by his other coaches, most of which are older and have many more years of experience than me. I am really proud of the guys on the team. They have really come together as a team this year and really represented everything we stand for out in this sport so great."

In order to boost team camaraderie, all the wrestlers have a mandatory practice. Head coach Tymen Baima's goal was to "have the winner's trophy at the end of the year."

The team was great, UCF representation that was great. Baima said, "we have a lot of dedicated guys on our team."

UCF took third place out of 33 competitors in weight class, wrestling in the 133 weight class, and freshman Richard Rippy placed fourth, wrestling at 184. UCF ranked first place one day of the three-day competition, but this year was the closest fight at victory in nationals. Sanford placed third an has earned the title of a three-time NCWA All-American. "This season did well overall, but there were shortcomings," Sanford said. "I didn't do as well as I could have, a lot of people came through for the team, like freshmen Devon Jackson and Steve DeAngustino."

Fernandez said he plans to help coach next season. "From a coach's standpoint, the guys really came together, considering the high level of competition, said. "We still have a strong wrestling team this year and really represented everything we stand for out in this sport so great."

Baima said he expects to be the best shot at victory in nationals. Sanford placed third and has earned the title of a three-time NCWA All-American. Britain plans to withdraw 1,500 troops

By ROBERT H. REID

BAGHDAD — Britain is planning to withdraw 1,500 soldiers this spring in what the British military called a phased reduction of its presence in Iraq.

The announcement came as Britain and the United States were discussing a possible withdrawal of their forces in Iraq. The British military said it was planning to withdraw 1,500 soldiers from Iraq by the end of March, as part of a broader plan to reduce its forces in the country.

Britain's military presence in Iraq has been under pressure since the start of the conflict in 2003, and the British government has been under increasing pressure to reduce its forces in the country. The British military has been involved in some of the most controversial aspects of the conflict, including the use of force against civilians and the detention of prisoners.

The British military said the withdrawal was part of a broader plan to reduce its forces in Iraq, and that it would be implemented in phases. The plan was expected to be announced in the coming weeks.

The British military said it was confident that the withdrawal would be implemented smoothly, and that it would maintain its commitment to the security of the Iraqi people.

The British military said it would continue to work closely with the Iraqi government and other international partners to ensure a safe and stable Iraq.

The British government has been under increasing pressure to reduce its forces in Iraq, and to end its involvement in the conflict.

Pak: Youth can be ‘fickle’

FOCUS:

through hope, authenticity and trust

Pak, who is admittedly better known for interviewing celebrities such as Britney Spears and P. Diddy, has reported on politics for MTV News since 2001, providing coverage of events ranging from Katrina Katrina to President George W. Bush’s reelection.

“We’ve been really lucky to cover really major news stories in the past seven years or so,” Pak said.

Pak also discussed her own experiences as a Korean-American and the difficulties that multicultural individuals can have in adjusting to society.

“Growing up inside my house, it was like Korea circa 2966,” Pak said. “Outside my house, it was America in 1985, and the event accomplished its goal of attracting more everyday life and in times of political conflict.

“My parents and the event accomplished its goal of attracting more people and about whether or not young voters really could make a difference. “You’re probably been between 40 and 60 percent higher than the primaries have been at the same time of the group that is fickle, I’ll be the first to admit it.”

Pak also emphasized the difficulty of reaching young people through hope, authenticity and trust.

“The question of what makes them fickle is that our generation cannot take ourselves too seriously,” Pak said.

The Pegasus Grand Ballroom was packed with people.

The event focused on the issue of politics and government.

The keynote speaker for the event was Stilinski Pak, who last week said she “would reach a broad conclusion of the community a move racially and ethnically diverse audience.

Regarding the national security and war on terror panelists, Pak noted the relevance of such discussions.

“Young people are probably a more central, prominent and permanent feature of life than they has been in the past,” Pak said.

During the initial panel, Pak spoke on behalf of the Republican Party, declaring that U.S. economic policies are substantially self-contained and Americans can no longer control their own futures.

“Understanding America’s place in the world is going to be critical for the president of 2008,” Pak said.

Pak also mentioned the primary US problem to understanding fundamental economic problems in respect to budget deficits and social issues.

At the conclusion of each panel, students were encouraged to ask questions of the panelists. Political science major Michelle Garcia was one of the students who asked questions of the panelists.

“The goal of this event was to bring together young people through hope, authenticity and trust and the event accomplished its goal of attracting more young people than it had in previous years,” Pak said.

“American Idol across the room tonight, I think this is the smartest audience he’s ever seen,” Pak said, because he’s a political talk show host and UC Professor who was asked to host the event. “The road to the White House is 2008 is history in the making.”

After Pak concluded her speech, multiple students questioned her about how the lack of diversity of people who do not young voters really could have an impact on the election.

“I think that young people have more impact than we have probably been between 40 and 60 percent higher than the primaries have been at the same time of the group that is fickle, I’ll be the first to admit it.”

Pak also emphasized the difficulty of reaching young people through hope, authenticity and trust.

“Trying to get any programming, much less social, socially relevant, politically relevant programming, to this audience is very difficult,” Pak said. "You’re talking about a group that is so used to controlling what they want to see, the things they want to see, and that perspective they want to see it on the Internet, and that’s just the way it is.”

After Pak’s exit, Lou Frey said he was the founder of the institute and the perspective he has seen, “It’s a good amount of money being spent on Medicare, Medicaid and Social Security to emphasize the inadequacy of the remaining funds in terms of education.”

Haynes outlined his dissatisfaction with the current presidential candidates.

“I would like to know why the presidential candidates have not acknowledged that this war is in an unconventional war for which there is no conventional victory,” he said. “Second, why aren’t candidates are not dealing with this war as a resources economy.”

Third, why hasn’t a single candidate publicly recognized that there is no national security without global security? And fourth, why is there no clear mention of the European Union and the United Nations encouraging global peace and security?

Haynes offered an absolute, “You cannot be accomplished without commitment,” he said.

ACCOMPANYING PANELIST:

Shawn focused more on terrorism and the role it is taking on the stage. “The war on terrorism is a transnational battle. It’s a battle of hearts and souls,” he said. “At least during the Cold War we had bipolarism concepts and international politics. Now, we have a polarization among political parties.”

Haynes then addressed Haynes when making assumptions about terrorism, realizing that the idea that terrorism is truly international in scope, a reticent form of conflict.

“We are dealing with global interregnum here,” he added. At the end of the national security and war on terror panel, the audience posed several questions to both Haynes and Shawn.

One audience member asked, "Do we go about forming a coalition after losing the trust of the American people."

Haynes said, “I think for us, we think we can deal with that above, it is a major strategic misstep.”

WASHINGTON — Top executives of the five largest U.S. oil companies were pressed Tuesday to explain the soaring fuel prices and huge industry profits and why they weren’t investing more in developing renewable energy sources such as wind and solar.

The executives, peppered with questions from skeptical lawmakers, said they understood that high energy costs are hurting consumers and that they acknowledged the deflected blame, arguing that their profits were locked in last year — and that they were hard pressed by lawmakers to defend their profits.

"The anger level is rising significantly," said Rep. Emanuel Cleaver, D-Mo., relating what he had heard in investing his district during the recent two-week congressional recess.

Alluding to the fact that congressmen often don’t rate other renewable projects as high as their energy sources such as wind energy and solar, "Your approval rating is lower than ours, and that means Simon said his company’s, while they earn tens of billions of dollars, they also invest tens of billions in exploration and oil production overseas. "Our earnings, though

Six-run eighth propels Knights

Knights overall record to 20-14 on the season while the Herd fell to 12-23, 4-7 in C-USA.

The Knights will play the last of a six-game road stint tonight when they travel to Jacksonveil to take on North Florida.

WrestleMania spectacle is overrated

Championship, is already taking a stance that fans of the sport could probably agree with.

Even more so, some observers are just plain fed up with the spectacle tennis positive for steroids.

Now quick, what first comes to mind when you think of wrestling and insanity? Which tragedy pops into your head first?

It is Dewey Bayzert.

Chris Benoit?

Included examples, perhaps, but somehow we still get all giddy when World Wrestling Entertainment brings its show to town.

If we are willing to look past the many, many, many flaws of professional wrestling and celebrate its splendor, then we should also do the same for mixed martial arts, a sport with significantly fewer problems.

It’s a sport that features some of the best, most talented athletes in the world, a sport picking up the slack where boxing has allowed its fans.

Mixed martial arts is not without its flaws, for sure; UFC President Dana White is not averse to joining the league.

But the problems that many in the media tend to harp on are just plain wrong. Too brutal? Which sport is a that we all watch on Sunday? The one where con-.

versations, broken bones and violence have the audience on edge.

What about that one on Sunday? The one where conversations, broken bones and violence have the audience on edge.

ECU offense leads to 1st series loss at home for UCF stretch for the Knights, but after beat­ing up on the clearly inferi­or teams on its non-conference sched­ule, UCF has lost four of its first six conference games.

“Instead of feeling sorry for yourself, you’ve just got to get up there and play,” Bergman said. “There’s no secret to it.”

The Knights (22-6 overall, 2-4 in C-USA) opened the series with a 3-2 win off of two unearned runs. They were then beaten 10-2 Sat­urday, and had a hard time pushing any runs across Sunday, even when it seemed the Pirates (18-7, 3-3) wanted them to.

With one out in the fourth inning, ECU scored a ground­ball to second, but UCF second baseman Mitchell Statham couldn’t handle it. After a 2-0 out by Sean Richardson, Arnold stole second and went to third when catcher Chris Basham threw to center field for the second Pirate error of the inning. But Chris Duffy struck out to end the inning, stranding Arnold.

Arnold’s run would have tied the score at 3 and given the Knights a bit of momentum, but instead the Pirates responded with five runs in the fifth inning to blow the game wide open.

UCF starting pitcher Mitch Herold gave up one run through four innings and had retired seven straight batters entering the fifth. But after a leadoff single and a sac­ryfice bunt, Herold was stranding Arnold. With one out in the fourth inning, Arnold hit weak ground ball to second, but ECU second baseman Broe Sutton couldn’t handle it.

Bergman said of the 10-2 loss on Sat­urday, “Instead of feeling sorry for yourself, you’ve just got to get up there and play.”

UCF pitcher Cody Allen relieved Herold at the middle of the 5th inning during the Knights’ 10-1 loss to the Pirates on Sunday. It was not one of Allen’s better outings as he allowed 3 runs in 2.2 innings of work, facing 6 batters and allowing 3 hits.

UCF’s next game is tonight in another weekday home meeting with Florida Gulf Coast. The Knights came out of that game in Fort Myers with an 8-4 victory, helped out by seven runs in the first two innings and a stellar pitching performance by Carmine Giardina.

You may not think that the price of a pack of cigarettes by a dollar could affect you, but it has tremendous effects, whether you are a smoker or someone who has never picked up a pack.

The increased price in the past few years has led to more smokers buying $115 worth of cigarettes, which is not pocket change for UCF. This increase in the price of cigarettes is not the only increase that has been seen. The price of other tobacco products has also been rising.

Cigarette tax is not as a crutch

American's outlook on Iraq war is not all bad

Your article calling for a United States exit from Iraq contains ‘off the record’ comments and facts that are incorrect, and in a distorted picture of the situation. In its current form, your piece is a biased and one-sided representation of the situation.

Another crutch used by the military and the government is the war on drugs. This war has not been successful in reducing drug use, and it has led to an increase in the number of people in prison. The government needs to consider different approaches to drug use, such as harm reduction strategies and treatment programs.
