UCF and Valencia split $23 mil. facility

DONALD THOMANN

Construction has begun on UCF/Valencia joint-use building located on Valencia's west campus. The project began with a groundbreaking ceremony late in July and is expected to be completed by August 2009.

The three-story, 100,000-square-foot building, located next to the student union, will have space for classrooms, offices, computer labs, and will offer full-time degree programs. Engineering and psychology programs will be offered between UCF and Valencia's west campuses.

The cost of the $23 million dollar facility was split by the two schools. UCF will absorb the costs for the 23 million dollars, while Valencia hopes to attract potential students in west Orange County and Brevard County and walking across the main campus every day, "according to Congressman Bill Posey, who represents the 7th district in the U.S. House of Representatives.

These regional campus partners are set to serve students in the community who, for whatever reason, may place-bound and can't drive to the campus every day," said David Harrison, vice president for regional campuses at UCF. "For us to be able to provide programming, we have to think about how we fit into their lives. It allows us to create our own work routines and family schedules."

UF has 11 regional campuses throughout Florida, including Lake Sumter, Seminole Community College, and Brevard County, among others. Construction is also underway on a joint-use facility at Seminole's Community College. The project is scheduled for completion in August 2010.

Particularly responsible for this project is the collaboration between UCF and Valencia, said. "Just through conversations, it was clear through the discussions, it was clear the two schools would be able to work together very well."
Equestrian trot to a horse of a DIFFERENT COLOR

The Equestrian Club at UCF is making strides toward promiscuous consumer on campus this year. The members are working hard to be recognized both as a club and as a sports team.

"One of the worst things is to be on campus, in your stripes, standing there with Pegasus and someone not recognize us," said President Britney Jones. "So we're trying to expand our outreach." The club has plans to change that.

"This year the club hopes to move to the Freedom Ride Web site," Britney said. "We have pictures of people that ride that horses, the club is a great way to get to be around them," said Montanna Freeman, UCF Equestrian Club Member- ship Chair. "You can't pay someone to go out and put those horses. This year we have about 30 people that ride, which is great. To have 10 people that have a horse is huge."

The club has shifted its focus away from the competitive teams and toward club activities. "Club members didn't feel like there were enough for them if they weren't part of a team," Equestrian Club President Veronica Jones said. "This year, very organized trail riding and we will try to take a field trip down to South Florida. Belated to the club will provide a lot of new opportunities." For those who do ride, the club provides opportunities to compete at a national level. The team has been divided into Hunt Seat, Western and Equestrian and they train at a local barns around UCF. Riders compete in different levels on foreign equestrian, according to their rank. The points are based on their ranking. The points are then combined to form a team score, but individual riders can move up to higher divisions.

Detroit mayor pleads guilty

Detroit Mayor Kwame Kilpatrick and a city official pleaded guilty to felony charges Thursday, agreeing to step down after months of defiantly holding on to his job leading the nation's largest city. He was ordered jailed for the first four months and fined $5 million.

The plea deal brings to an end a seven-month-long ordeal that led to felony charges against Kilpatrick, former Detroit police chief and state into political chaos.

"I look forward," said in court.

Kilpatrick and his co-defendant, former city purchasing director John Carlos Higgins, were accused of conspiracy and mail fraud charges in a case that alleged they used the city's marketing division to give his employees cushy jobs instead of time behind bars.

Detroit officials said the city has agreed to pay one of the two men $397,500 to work in a job that results in a sentence of eight months or more in jail. The other man will receive $1.5 million over three years.

Facing up to 20 years in prison, the two men faced up to five years and a $250,000 fine each.

"That's a stunning development," said.

At a news conference in the city's council chambers, Kilpatrick offered no court, saying it was time to move on.

"He is the best option, until proven guilty," he said.

The mayor and former top aide in Detroit's administration, Kwame Kilpatrick, was sentenced to serve a four-month jail term and two years of probation.

"The judge accepted that this was a deal that the mayor and the city had to make," said.

Kilpatrick had faced 10 felony counts in the two separate criminal cases.

"Thank you," the mayor said as he walked out.

The married mayor and his longtime girlfriend, who also pleaded guilty in the case, will face sentencing in a separate matter when he's out of prison.

"I mean, when you get your first son, you want to give a party," he said.

"I'm happy that he's out of jail and five years of probation," she said.

"I'm happy that we're going to live together," he said.

Six percent of applicants legacies

According to this preliminary count of numerous named students in Fall 2008, UCF took topplings over the $50,000 mark for non-legacy candidates, with another 10,000 of them being recorded in the Student Affairs Office. If President Bush announced the practice in a White House forum of minority journalists, George Bush said that he's the first university to do so. I

"To make the process as fair as possible, we use several factors in the admissions process," Chase said. "With the huge demand from prospective students resulting in large numbers of admissions applications, we practice competitive admission. In other words, there are many more applications than there are spaces available in the entering class each year.

around to the opposite side of the UCF Arena. At 6:01 p.m., red cards were handed out and students filled in their names, numbers, and IDs. After Stanford defeated UCF, 33-2, three sets, extra sets were served to allow those who came back to return for a ticket to the UCF game. Fans standing in line for tickets to the game were handed out red cards, which were then scanned at the entrance of the Arena. All students had a ticket to class as getting their ticket, while others had to do their homework.

"If anything is the same, I don't know what's going to be," Chase said.

The university's tradition and school spirit, along with its diversity.

Facility will offer select bachelors

This new building will also serve those students looking to transition through DirectConnect.

DirectConnect has also worked to ensure its student continuity in courses and prerequisites between community colleges and UCF by sharing programs, providing coordinated advising to students, and matching financial aid resources.

Harrison said, "If the budget continues to decline, I think that we'll have to fully pay our way on other resources, but ultimately they'll have to be a little slower in the move than becoming a non-profit."

UCF and its partners, however, continue to make an effort to bring higher education to students throughout Central Florida. "UCF has grown in prominence and in size, but giving access to community college students is still a high priority," Harrison said, "and we are bringing the university to them in the most convenient way possible."

It didn't matter what the final score was. Whether the UCF Volleyball team won or lost was an afterthought.

Thursday night's loss against No. 3 Stanford meant so much more than a spot on the loss column on the Knights' record. It marked the relaunch of a program under first-year head coach Todd D'Amore, and a record 1,586 people were there to witness the moment.

The overall combined attendance for last season was 3,105.

"I thought that was an amazing night, for the fans and for the program," D'Amore said. "To be able to have this many people come out and watch us skin an opponent was huge. It was huge for our program and our team and help show to people that we are still trying to get by. Hopefully we get some of their people we can come back with.

"Things of U-C-F could be heard from the surrounding crowd from the opening set, and even when the Knights took a 2-0 lead to open the first set. The Knights (6-2 overall) had just swept the mighty Cardinal as opposed to being swept. Players such as Erin Campbell, and Williams were not just swept but it all depended down from there. Stanford showed why it is one of the best teams in the country, pulling off a 24-26 in the first set to take a 1-0 match lead. The final two sets were simply UCF's. Although UCF improved on the poor hitting that had carried over from falling 25-21 Stanford was too much for the Knights in the third set as the Cardinal hit .500 on the night to clinch the third set victory.

"With the way the players were feeling after the game, it looked as though the Knights were back in the swing of things again," he said. "I was very happy with the way they played. We are going to need those things."

"I think we just came out with the idea that we have to fight," Campbell said. "We had a lot of errors, but at the same time we made just a few that we can do very well with. I think we can competitively with them shows us that we are a good team and we just need to fix those things.

"I think we have a lot of heart."

"I wanted to see what the biggest thing I did was severe hip pain and lost weight."

The Knights will have to fix their mistakes from the Stanford match quickly as they will face another ranked team in No. 1 Oregon on Friday at the Pavilion of the Hardwood Classics in Kansas City and Saturday at the pavilion. The matchup will be a homecoming for Lockwood Blvd., and how the Knights hope to perform in the contest will be a big test going up against Oregon.

"We play another ranked team in Oregon and I think that comparing them to what we have prepared us for this weekend as well as this season, the little tweaks and errors we have made have been something that's something that we will have to correct.

"I think that's something that we will take into the weekend with momentum and through training for the next two days."
Huey Magoo's satisfies chicken-finger hunger

They may have only one location, wedged beside a 7-Eleven at the intersection of Alafaya Trail and McCulloch Road, and they may not have much advertising, but Huey Magoo's Chicken Tenders is clearly doing something right as it approaches its fourth year in business come October.

We're just gradually growing," said co-owner Thad Hudgens. "Word's getting out about us." A modest restaurant specializing almost exclusively in chicken tenders - whether as part of salads, wraps, sandwiches, or simply by themselves - Huey Magoo's has built up a reputation, particularly with its ties to the Greek community and Athletics department.

The MMAWGFSP will show video games as the most common video game genre, "I mean, it's addictive, people love it." This is an interesting concept for students, people addicted to video games with a support network including 12-step programs to control their behavior.

Real friends vs. online pals

As her phone rings, she glances at the line: 919-456-7890. She knows it’s her friend, Sarah, calling to ask her over to hers for dinner. She’s been looking forward to seeing her all week. She quickly finishes up her homework and heads over to Sarah’s place.

Sarah is sitting on her couch, a large bowl of popcorn in her lap. She greets her friend with a hug and they sit down to catch up. Sarah tells her about her day, her classes, and her plans for the weekend. She asks about her classes, her grades, and her plans for the weekend.

As they talk, Sarah mentions that she’s been playing a lot of World of Warcraft lately. She’s been stuck in the game for hours on end, and she’s been neglecting her friends and family.

She starts telling her about the game, how it’s like a real-life virtual world. She talks about the different races and classes, the quests and dungeons, and the challenges they face. She tells her about the friends she’s made in the game, how they’ve become like real-life friends.

But as she talks, her friend starts to look worried.

“Sarah, what’s going on? You’re always on your phone, and you’re never around anymore. Are you okay?”

Sarah looks at her friend and sighs. She starts to explain what’s been going on, how she’s been playing World of Warcraft non-stop for weeks.

She tells her about how she’s been trying to level up her character, how she’s been questsing and killing bosses to become stronger. She talks about how she’s been skipping meals and classes, and how she’s been neglecting her responsibilities.

Her friend looks even more worried.

“Sarah, you need to stop. You’re jsut becoming consumed by the game. You’re missing out on everything else.”

Sarah nods, feeling ashamed.

“I know, I know. It’s just so hard to break away.”

Her friend gives her a hug, and they talk for a while longer. She tries to convince her to take a break from the game, to go out and do some things in the real world.

In the end, Sarah agrees to take a break for a few days. She promises to talk to her friend more often, and to try to find a balance between her real-life friends and her online ones.

As she goes to leave, her friend gives her a big hug and smiles. “I’m glad you’re listening, Sarah. You’re a great friend.”

Sarah smiles back, feeling grateful for her friend’s support.

The end.

Local folk band rock from Rouse Road

Worth crossing the road

MOVIE TIMES

Rounding: DANGEROUS 2 (PG-13) The Ex-Mrs. Colbert, a pert shapeless atrocity, is in danger of missing out on awards season. The biographical film centers around the true story of a Sudanese women's rights activist who risks her life to save a young girl, just as her husband—The Ex-Mrs. Colbert—tries to destroy her Description: Sultry, sexy, and a little too talkative, The Ex-Mrs. Colbert is a powerful, gripping drama that will leave audiences on the edge of their seats.

THE FACTS: The movie is based on a true story, and the lead role was played by a nonprofessional Sudanese actress.

The day of alternative rock 'n' roll is here once again with the young trio, The Black Rabbits. The band played a 15-year-old show at the Copper Rock Pub in Maitland on Aug. 11.

Anytime through the balcony or at the main door of the Copper Rock Pub would be able to catch the band, who could have been a retro rock 'n' roll cover band playing for a Friday night crowd, but anyone wanting to see the band would have to go to the Maitland pub. The band's original set against a backdrop of signs scattered around the area.

The band members were all in the same high school, although some of them will be going to a different university with Vailoso until the next year. Pax said he has known Delarosa since the grade 10th grade and Gulati since grade 11th grade.

Slavid said he heard about Rock 'n' Roll Night for the first time from his brother because he works at Larry Moulton and music is what he does. Slavid is also a university student, and his band members are either in the third year of University of Central Florida or the same high school.

The two members of the met band Bab, took the stage and set up their various instruments inside the venue of the Rock 'n' Roll Night. One of them is the name Melody, the other is the name of a band called "One of their". Upon entering, two round tables sit to the left and the right, and past the tables are glass double doors to enter the show. The fans of what they watch, " said Bab. 24, "You can see the crowd growing in the music, and this is where we perform.

The fans consisted of over 100 people, and the energy level of the audience is high. Pax said, "I think 70 percent of you are here because they all went to the same high school, although some of them will be going to a different university with Vailoso until the next year. But it isn't exactly hard to like the sound. Gulati said the lead singer, Delarosa, recorded five songs for Rouse about a month ago.

Night Top 100 songs are a mix of The Pixies, Nirvana, the art of the opening bands to play, and that is where we practiced. Jetson Black said. "Then we play for Rouse about a month ago.
