FRONT COVER

"A View of Pensacola in West Florida" is a black and white engraving published and dedicated by George Gauld to Sir William Burnaby, rear admiral and commander of the British fleet at Jamaica. From the British ensigns on the vessels and the flag flying from the flagstaff, this is obviously a picture of Pensacola during the British period. Since Gauld's name is not mentioned in any reference sources as an engraver, and since such a skill is not mentioned in his book, it is unlikely that he was the engraver of this picture, but he probably drew the sketch of the scene from which it was made. The engraving is in the Prints and Photographs Division, Library of Congress.

Gauld, surveyor of the coasts of Florida, was born in 1732 at Ardrack, Bamffshire, and he was educated at King's College, Aberdeen. In 1763 he was appointed to make a survey of all newly acquired English territory in the West Indies, and in March of the following year he sailed aboard the Tartar for Jamaica to join Burnaby's fleet. In August 1764 he accompanied Sir John Lindsay to Pensacola and he may have made a sketch of the harbor at that time. He was a friend of Philip Pittman, author of The Present State of the European Settlements on the Mississippi . . . (1770), and Thomas Hutchins whose An Historical Narrative and Topographical Description of Louisiana, and West-Florida was published in 1784. They helped him draft charts and plans of West Florida. Gauld's unpublished "General Description of the Sea-Coast, Harbours, Lakes, Rivers, &ca. of The Province of West Florida, 1769," is in the American Philosophical Society Archives, Philadelphia. His charts appeared in the Atlantic Neptune (1780), and his surveys of the Caribbean and Florida coasts were published in London by William Faden in 1790 and 1796. Gauld was a volunteer during the siege of Pensacola in 1781. He was taken as a prisoner, first to Havana and then to New York; he died in London, June 8, 1782, at the age of fifty, a few months after his return to England. He is buried in the cemetery of the Tottenham Court Road Chapel.
