Credit card companies target students

SEBASTIAN CHURCH

Credit card companies are targeting students with offers of free gifts and rewards. The college is not at all modern in its financial burden. Talloon, Boles, and Boin. From these sharp spires to the everyday fiscal demands of nutrition and personal hygiene, Joe Capra of the college, America, is in dire need of financial resources.

"Young students, when they start college, they need to manage their money and understand the concept of bills," said Summer Baffes, the credit card holder of Americans for Fair Credit. According to the Boston College graduate, credit card companies use a predatory business model to lure customers. College students speak out about the large portions of their credit card bills.

Credit card companies employ "affinity marketing," a strategy that makes the company seem affiliated with particular schools and organizations. One way card issuers accomplish this strategy is by printing a logo on student IDs. As a result, students are more likely to open a credit card account.

In A17's main goal is "to establish fair credit policies and practices." As a col...

Dinosaurs revived on stage

MELISSA CHADBOURNE
Staff Writer

Dinosaurs walk the world again in a live-action performance starting Wednesday at the Amway Arena in downtown Orlando.

"Walking With Dinosaurs The Live Experience" is a $20 million production that began showing in Australia in 2007, based on the 1999 BBC TV series "Walking with Dinosaurs,

The show takes its audience through the lives of 15 dinosaurs that represent 20 species throughout the 200 million years of dinosaurs walking the Earth. "We take the audience on a journey back in time," director Scott Faris said in a press release, "and show them how the dinosaurs might have actually looked in their prime — big, sometimes frightening, sometimes comical monsters — that fought for survival every day of their lives."

The show is not a movie or exhibit but an actual theatrical performance, with each of the dinosaurs made to scale with life-like movement and sound. The dinosaurs move through drivers and puppeteers, with larger ones like the Stegosaurus and Tyrannosaurus not needing one driver and two puppeteers. The smallest dinosaur, a baby T. rex and Utahraptors, is driven and fit five feet in length. Smaller dinosaurs like the baby T. rex and Dilophosaurus are actual dinosaurs and have an internal skeleton.

Video footage of the dinosaurs' creation is available on the show's Web site, www.amwayarena.com, and on YouTube, showing the detail and complexity of the suits and the work put into them. It also demonstrates the way they are driven and controlled by their pilots.

Student members of the ChinaVine team, such as humanities major Megan Peck, were also fully involved in the visit, planning the meals and entertainment and assisting the signing and reception. Seven students even took the five-gigant doing at Universal City-Walk.

With two Memorandums of Understanding existing between the universities, Pan and his delegation discussed moving toward a more formalized exchange program where UCF students would continue to travel to China to document folk art, and where Shandong students would come to UCF for film and other classes in the College of Arts and Humanities.

The product of their collaborative effort, combined with those of fellow partners University of Oregon and Beijing National University, can be seen on their Web site chinavine.org or by visiting their first photo exhibit.

"The exhibit will accomplish several goals," Congdon said. "The first of the students whose work will be displayed will have a chance to show off their talents, as they are exceptional photographers. It also will give others a chance to see how they formed their experience in China, and it will help give ChinaVine more visibility."

The Samuel Brown College of Engineering at UCF will host UCF ChinaVine's first photo exhibit beginning Nov. 17 to coincide with the universities' International Education Week. The exhibit will display the photographic works of four students: Ian Hartman, Ben Ramirez, Yvonn Vladiando and Sharon Weaver.

The exhibit will leave the Honors College on Jan. 3 and travel to the University of Oregon, where it will be on display throughout January. Before being placed in an Orange County Library.

O'Leary, not players or coordinator, to blame

Brian Murphy

Accountability is one of those cliches words in sports. It's not there with the idea of "this team swallowed hard" or "Territorial Lions love," but it's always around.

Two coaches in every sport stress that each of their players is accountable. George O'Leary has a hard-nosed, no-nonsense coach who always has and every player needs to be accountable for themselves and for the team.

So with his offense -- because it is so offensive -- putting up yardage numbers this season it was the only way to put on his offense. What he promises today earlier this season.

O'Leary's team continues to struggle on offense, and as his rotation in running backs loses many questions without answers, O'Leary is still on the offensive coordinator Tim Salton.

During Thursday's press conference prior to the Southern Miss game, O'Leary stressed that he wanted to play all four of his running backs during the game.

O'Leary has been the offensive coordinator for Eastern Michigan University, where he wanted to play all four of his running backs during the game.

O'Leary's offense has struggled throughout the season, but the Knights found the right on offense.

Miami match Friday

Miami Dolphins squared off against the Lions, and both teams have had their ups and downs this season. The Dolphins finished strong in Miami, back behind after a strong start and with a 12-10 victory.

Marshall also said that this was a historical year for America, bringing his season total to 15. But against the Golden Knights, it is fair to them to bring their best players to the game. We have to be creative in finding ways to get the ball into the hands of our best player - Joe Flacco.

He also mentioned how O'Leary has wasted his career jump start, and up to a $20,000 bonus for specific plays. Instead, O'Leary got cold in his other three seasons, the Dolphins were unable to run the ball in the second half, to which Marshall said, "It's not about what Salmon can get done. It's about what O'Leary wants to do."

J. O'Leary also said that many players, especially the wide receivers, were called, but were changed to pass plays at the line of scrimmage after he saw that UCF was giving up seven and eight defenders down. He thought it was the right flat for Kevin Smith, and the touchdown, his fourth of the season.

Luster for laziness leaves us lacking affirmative action is obsolete.

Since the beginnings of this country and this nation, there has been a series of human indignities that we have labeled nothing less than unethical.

When English settlers first arrived in America, they slowly wiped out our entire nation of Native Americans and reduced our population to a fraction of what it once was.

The settlers had become accustomed to treating the land as their own after the Native American population was decimated by disease and the spread of foreign diseases, we were left with nothing but a decimated population and human exploitation.

And the worst is yet to come. In Africa, where they are supposed to be one of the greatest collections of the world's population, and yet they have nothing left but a terrible human being.

It's hard to conceive what could have possibly been going on through the mind of those people, and yet they made them think that they were human beings.

It's a sad irony that our ancestors may come to know the truth of this statement: "The only thing we know is that they were..." —a corrective measure that is, and we will never happen again.

We need to understand that, today, we're faced with something new. We need to learn what we're facing today. It's something that we're never likely to understand.

One major tool used to rectify an action is affirmative action. This is a broad policy that doesn't necessarily make a particular injustice less than that of the government itself.

Affirmative action has run its course

Well, it's official. Mark Jan 26, 1999. The University of Michigan was ordered to get rid of its affirmative action program.
