KARL LEHMANN CALLS HIS COLONELS ON THE CARPET; REPORTS SHOW MANY ARE TAKING INTEREST IN CAMPAIGN

Reports of Colonels on Formation of Teams Show Many are Taking Interest in Campaign

The fire of questions and answers was like artillery practice at the noon meeting Saturday of colonels and others closely related to the Rollins development movement.

With all the promptitude and dispatch for which Karl Lehmann, general chairman of the project, is famous, the meeting got under way at 12:15. But not without invoking the aid of the Omnipotent One. An impressive and beautiful digression came in the form of "grace" which was said by the chairman.

Then everyone squared away in his or her place and snappy reports came from each of the colonels in response to snappy queries from the chairman. One after another they were called upon: Judge Cheney, Colonel Shearer, D. P. Sias, Leon B. Fort, Franklin O. King, J. Y. Cheney, Arthur Schultz, Miss Florence Bumby, C. Ellwood Kalbach, John S. Jaquith.

Colonel Shearer was not present, but sent word that his abundant energy was being in no way taxed in commissioning his officers and he wished more work to do and more worlds to conquer. Franklin King, to offset his absence, sent a little dash of caviar for the spread by reporting all his captains and aides appointed and awaiting the word "Go."

Announcement was made of the

FORMER ALUMNUS TALKS ON ROLLINS' PROSPECTS

Rev. Arthur C. Lincoln, in Address to Students, Cites Benefits to be Obtained by Enlarging College

"Rollins College should have generous support immediately," said Rev. C. Arthur Lincoln, pastor of the Congregational church of Daytona Beach, who spent yesterday in Winter Park and gave the weekly assembly address before the students of Rollins College.

"Our enrollment of students," continued Mr. Lincoln, because he himself is an alumnus of Rollins, having been there in 1898 at which time he served as editor of the Sandspur, "has reached the limit of its physical capacity and no provision has been made for an increase in the number of students next year. If the alumni and friends of the college will respond to the five year plan for financing the running expenses, President Holt can give himself at once to the imperative work of developing the capacity of the college until it is able to care for the ideal enrollment determined by

ALBERT NEWTON WINS M. FLOSSIE HILL PRIZE SHORT STORY CONTEST; JUDGES SPEAK WELL OF NARRATIVES

Maxton Parnell Pseudonym for Writer Who Wins $25 Prize for Best Short Story Submitted by Student of Rollins.

Fate smiled upon one student of Rollins Monday morning in chapel when it was announced that the M. Flossie Hill Prize Short Story Contest had successfully culminated, and the winner, known by the pseudonym of Maxton Parnell, was Albert Newton. While Dr. Harris led up to the announcement of the winner, literary aspirants were observed to hold their breaths and wait in terrible suspense. The announcement of the winner's name relieved the situation. Albert Newton is to be congratulated on his production.

Judges of the contest were five of the leading literary lights of the community. They consisted of: Mrs. P. A. Vans Agnew, Mrs. Edward W. Packard, Dr. William A. Colledge, Dr. Theodore K. Long, and Major Joseph G. Kitchell. Judgement was based upon these five points: atmosphere, character drawing, plot, originality.

Ten Vice-Chairmen Meet with Karl Lehmann and College Officials to Discuss Plans for Drive

President Hamilton Holt and other high officials of the college were present at an informal dinner under General Karl Lehmann at the Angebilt Hotel last week to assist in outlining concrete plans for inaugurating on April 14 an intensive movement for the raising of $60,000 a year, for

SAYS ROLLINS WILL BE CHRISTIAN

Leaning over the table the other evening, and looking into the interested faces gazing back into his own, Hamilton Holt told the group of prominent citizens about him that Rollins College will be a Christian college so long as his regime endures. "Of what use," he asked, "to turn out upon the community men and women whose brains only have been developed and attuned to higher educational things, while the souls within them have been left to wither and die upon the rocks of neglect?"

He said also that Rollins would always, under his guidance, be non-sectarian. He asked for himself the right to serve his God as his conscience dictated. And that right he would always extend to others.

The Case of Jimmy Fitzpatrick

By Maxton Parnell
(Winner of Short Story Contest)

Cold, clammy weather had laid siege to Paris. A penetrating drizzle had fallen all day and the evening had brought no sign of any let up. The well-nigh deserted streets were dimly lighted by lamps that glimmered red through the mist. Occasionally a motor car passed, reflecting the various lights on its wet sides. A few pedestrians hurried along the sidewalks, but none stopped at "Le Chat Noir." Inside were but four people: the low stumpy proprietor, who was reading "Le Journal de Soir," and three well-dressed Americans, met for the first time. They grouped themselves around a table in the rear. There was the middle-aged, gray-haired man from Wall street, the tall thin man from Cleveland, and the young consul from Bombay. Someone mentioned the War and the number of American soldiers who had married French wives. The man from Cleveland was telling of a young friend of his who had married a French girl, but had soon left her.

As he talked a gleam of interest came to the eyes of the man from Wall street who thereafter puffed rapidly at the stub of his black cigar till the other had finished. Then giving one last vigorous pull at the cigar he laid it on the table and with a slight cough cleared his throat.

"The strangest case," he said, "was that of young Fitzpatrick. I don't know whether either of you knew Jimmy; his father used to make the Fitzpatrick Printing Press, one of the best in the country. You knew him didn't you, Mullins?"

The man from Cleveland shook his head. "Don't know as I did," he replied.

"I did," spoke-up the young consul. "I knew him while he was at Yale and I met him again two years ago here in Paris."

The man from Wall street continued: "I have often wondered what ever became of him. He used to be the best bond salesman we had. That was before the War. When the great War broke out he volunteered and was one of the first to come over. He was several times cited for bravery, and seemed to be quite an idol over here. As soon as the War ended I wrote him that his old place was still open, and for him to come back. In about a month I had a letter thanking me for my kindness, but saying that he had met the most beautiful girl in the world and that he intended to marry her and settle down over here. I wrote to him at once offering him a position as our foreign representative, but he never replied. I wired his commander asking him if he knew where I could find Jimmy. You know how it was, we couldn't afford to lose him. In a few days I received a reply from his commander saying that Jimmy, at his own request, had been discharged a few weeks before and had not been heard from since. For a long while I continued in my efforts to locate him, but I never succeeded; no one knew what had become of him; it was as though he had never existed. Perhaps, you can tell me where he is. I would like to find him for he had the making of a great business man in him."

The young consul toyed with his glass of Port for a moment, then slowly looking up at the other he replied; "I can't tell you anything that would help you, but I can tell you what I know if you would be interested in hearing it."

"I would," replied the man from Wall street.

Mullins nodded his head. "Go on," he urged.

The young consul began: "Even when we were at Yale Fitzpatrick had a desire to live in France. He had been here once, years before with an aunt, and he always maintained that there were no women in the world that could compare with the French. At the time, too, he was writing letters to a little French girl; he was planning to come over here as soon as he should graduate and marry her.

THE LADDER

By George Matthew Adams

There is something inspiring about a Ladder. It always points up—or it isn't a Ladder! There is a sermon, an essay, in the Ladder. But I just want to make a little "vest pocket" suggestion for you out of it.

First, the Ladder always begins at the bottom. And there is always "room at the top." The ladder you most desire, you yourself may choose. You can select one with a dozen or a thousand rounds. The longer the Ladder, of course, the higher you are sure to be when you reach the top.

Lincoln decided that he wanted a Ladder with many rounds. Think of it—from that little Kentucky log hut to the presidency of the greatest free nation in history! And Napoleon—he didn't even give a glance at any of the little stubby ladders that were lying around by the million. No, sir, he wanted one that would take him over the Alps!

As you climb do not forget that the strength accumulated at the lower rounds increases with every higher round. Remember, too, that it is round by round, always. The over-ambitious who, thinking to play a trick on fortune, seek to skip a round or so, nearly always slip or fall and are compelled to begin all over again.

Pick a big, long Ladder—climb it slowly, honestly and Never mind the crowd below. Keep your eyes on the round at the

DR. UPHOF IS GOLDEN PERSONALITY PROFESSOR

Varied Experience and Useful Here and Abroad

Dr. J. C. Uphof, head of the department of biology at Rollins College has had a varied, useful and honored career. A college and university education gained in some of the biggest colleges and universities that Europe has to offer and a tense interest in the subject he teaches, combined with his golden personality stamp. Dr. Uphof is regarded as invaluable to the teaching staff of Rollins College.

Professor Uphof is a graduate of the College of Agriculture and Horticulture in the Netherlands, one of the leading institutions of its kind in the continent of Europe. Post graduate work in botany was taken up at the University of Amsterdam where he studied especially under the world famous botanist, Prof. Hugo de Vries, founder of modern genetics and of plant physiology. He also took courses in chemistry and physics under men like Van't Hoff, Van der Waals, Lorenz and Zeeman, all men possessing the Noble prize.

In order to familiarize himself with the different subfields of botany, genetics and economic botany, Dr. Uphof spent several years at various institutions, universities and establishments of many countries. In 1900 he went to Germany, where he studied at the Botanical Institutions of the Universities of Berlin and Bonn under such widely-known scientists as Engler and Strassburger. Further he studied practical plant breeding of agricultural crops at the extensive seed establishments in Quedlingburg on the Harz and in Enfurt. He made also a study of the potash mines in Strassfurt and visiting various places of scientific and technical interest along the Rhine.

Eleven months of the year 1908 were spent in Sweden. There he was connected with one of the largest Scandinavian institutions in Gottenburg and was later engaged by the Swedish Institutions for Plant Breeding at Svalof where he acquainted himself with the various methods of improving agricultural crops as employed in Sweden. He was also at the botanical garden of the university of Copenhagen, Denmark. Later he was in Norway, where he studied the wild flora in the environments of Christiania, Drammen and Skien.

Switzerland called him in 1909 and he turned his attention to the vegetation of the alpine regions. During the same year he travelled in Italy, observing the citrus, olive and mulberry growing industries. He studied economic botany and agriculture under some of the most prominent professors in Paris and Brussels. The next year was spent in England, where he was chiefly engaged at the British Museum for Natural history and the world famous Royal Botanical Gardens at Kew near London. This institute is the largest in existence, possessing in its gardens and greenhouses 55,000 different species of plants. Dr. Uphof frequently came in touch with many prominent scientists and men of industry and was able to exchange views on important matters.

five years, so that the new $5,000,000 Rollins may be realized.

Chairman Lehmann, in announcing these vice-chairmen, expressed himself as highly gratified that ten of Orange County's leading citizens and recognized workers had agreed to assist him in heading up this movement for the better development of the community.

According to Mr. Lehmann's announcement, the "colonels" in the Rollins Movement will be as follows: Judge D. A. Cheney, Division A, Orlando; D. P. Sias, Division B, Orlando; Leon B. Fort, Division C, Orlando; Franklin O. King, Division D, Orlando; J. Y. Cheney, Division E, Orlando; Arthur Schultz, Division F, Winter Park and Maitland; Miss Florence Bumby, Division G, Winter Garden, Oakland and Ocoee; C. Ellwood Kalbach, Division H, Apopka and North Orange County; John S. Jaquith, Division I, Windermere and Gotha; Col. R. M. Shearer, Division J, Pinecastle and South Orange County.

"Miss Bumby, Don and Joe Cheney, Leon Fort, and C. E. Kalbach are all former students of Rollins," said Mr. Lehmann, "and in this leadership which they have undertaken, they are proven to us that Rollins has already developed men and women of fine ideals in this county. In securing Col. Shearer, Mr. King, Mr. Sias, Mr. Jaquith and Mr. Schultz, we are particularly fortunate because they are men who do things and who realize what a tremendous asset Rollins College can be to Orange County."

Lehmann, "are the key people to the success of our Rollins movement. Each in Orlando will have under him a lieutenant-colonel, an aide and 5 captains. Each captain will head a team of four men. In Winter Park there will be two teams headed by captains, and in Oakland, one team. Winter Park will have two teams and Maitland will have one team, while the other communities will be organized according to the judgment of their respective colonels."

Miss Florence Bumby, the only woman colonel in the Lehmann organization, authorized the following statement:

"I am sure I speak for the other colonels when I say that we are glad of an opportunity to be associated with President Hamilton Holt and thus enlist for service in the proposed movement to raise a development fund of $60,000 a year for the expenses of Rollins College during the five years that will be required for the proposed development of an ideal small college costing approximately $5,000,000."

"We believe in the value to Orange County of a model Christian College with a carefully selected faculty and student body, with unified buildings of Mediterranean architecture and landscape gardening of the highest type.

"And I am convinced too, concluded Miss Bumby, "that the citizens of Orange County have great faith in the leadership of President Hamilton Holt and his ability to give this community the best in higher education that America has to offer."

In addition to the dinner to be held at the Angebilt, a luncheon will be given at the same place next Saturday at 12:15 to go over final plans of the colonels. The colonels will also dine with the Advisory Committee at the Angebilt Monday evening as the guests of Irving Bacheller, chairman of the advisory committee.

TIE THIS

Some may long for the soothing touch
Of lavender, cream, or mauve;
But the ties I wear must possess the glare
Of a red-hot kitchen stove.
The books I read and the life I lead
Are sensible, sane and mild.
I like calm hats and I don't wear spats—
But I want my neckties wild!

Give me a wild tie, brother,
One with a cosmic urge!
A tie that will swear, and rip and tear
When it sees my old blue serge!

Oh, some will say that a gent's cravat
Should only be seen, not heard;
But I want a tie that will make men
cry
And render their vision blurred.
I yearn, I long for a tie so strong
It will take two men to tie it;
If such there be, just show it to me—
Whatever the price, I'll buy it!

Give me a wild tie, brother,
One with a lot of sins,
A tie that will blaze in a 'lectric gaze,
Down where the vest begins!

the trustees—a total of 700, 400 men and 300 women.

"While we are inclined to see an ideal college in beautiful buildings and luxuriant campus, and in terms of a fine faculty, we need to picture Rollins College in terms of young men and young women personally enriched for life in our needy world because they learned the things of life at Rollins. When we give to the college we enrich ourselves and the world in which we live," concluded the visitor. He also added that had it not been for Rollins College he probably would not have had an opportunity to get a college education, for it was Rollins that gave him an opportunity to work his way through.

In addressing the students of the college at the assembly hour, Dr. Lincoln spoke of how personal wealth can be acquired stating that the measure of one's riches must be made only by the use of the knowledge one possesses. By way of illustration he referred to futility of trying to enrich a Hottentot by giving him a library of Shakespeare, Browning and other great authors, but said that a cultivated person of today would possess great riches in owning such a library, because through this means, personal development can take place.

"We do not attend college to get facts primarily," said the speaker, "but to get knowledge of life and to learn how to live. The outstanding characteristic of truly great people, and their desire to give of themselves to other people so that in return they will receive the greatest happiness in life."

KARL LEHMANN CALLS HIS COLONELS ON THE CARPET; REPORTS SHOW MANY ARE TAKING INTEREST IN CAMPAIGN

Irving Bacheller dinner on Monday evening at 6:30 at the Angebilt, for members of the Advisory Board, and to which the colonels, their captains and aides were invited.

There will be music, possibly song, a sumptuous spread, rare good fellowship, close-ups of nationally known persons, but positively no solicitation of funds.

As a host, Mr. Bacheller has distinguished himself on many occasions. He has announced this as a purely social affair. He wants to gather around one board all of those he can who are interested in seeing that Hamilton Holt has the backing he asks in order that he may be untrammelled in the doing of greater educational things for Orange County and Florida.

A member of the Advisory Board who is an ardent admirer and supporter of President Holt in this undertaking said of him, how few there are who realize the immensity of the burden which he has assumed in taking upon himself the upbuilding of a college; how few realize the difficulties of the trail he is willing to blaze in the cause of education in Orange county.

"I read something that opened my eyes the other day, continued the speaker, "and I am passing it on to you so that you may acquaint others with some slight idea of the things that enter into the life of a college president:

"Suppose you were undertaking to discover how to take a boy or girl just out of high school and prepare him or her for life.

"Suppose you felt it to be your duty to teach that boy or girl to make a living, to take half the responsibility in founding a home—to sense values other than economic, to have right attitudes toward home life, neighbors, competitors, the state, God.

"Suppose you had four years in which to do this thing and you would be held to account by their parents and themselves, for your failure, if you failed, and would be given very little credit if you succeeded.

"Suppose your problem were multiplied by five hundred to fifteen hundred.

"Suppose that you had spent many years in discovering men and methods, and had found more than one hundred expert and consecrated men and women to help you with the problem.

"Suppose that those men and women were working almost beyond endurance, surely beyond the point where they can do their maximum in self-development and that they were, through financial stringency, compelled to give up most luxuries and even some necessities of life; that these men and women were willing to give all but were sometimes worn to the point that they expected things of you which lack of funds prevented your doing.

"Suppose that in addition to the complexity of the problem you had to use much obsolete equipment; that well considered recommendations from your staff were being turned down almost daily due to lack of funds; that your buildings could not be kept in good repair, nor improvements made without causing a deficit in current accounts; that you knew of a hundred things which would help to solve some part of your problem if you could afford them.

"You will then have some conception of the life of a College President."

ginality, and appropriateness of theme or subject, and treatment of materials. The winning story was rated high in each of these essentials. It might do well to mention, however, that the running was close. The winner won by no wide margin; in fact, until last percentage was figured, it was doubtful who might be the fortunate one.

It had been hoped that there might be a lovely little thing she was; only a bit old, I thought, for him. He used to show me her picture and tell me quite a lot about her and his plans for the future. But one day he received a letter saying that she was married and for him please not to write any more. For a while he was heartbroken, in fact, that was what caused him to decide to accede to the wishes of his father and ally himself with your firm."

"I can see how it was; anything to take his mind off the girl," said Mullins.

"When the War broke out he rather welcomed it as an excuse to come over here. Shortly after that I was appointed as consul to Bombay, and heard nothing more from him until two years ago when I met him here in Paris. He was then in search of his wife who had left him more than a year before, and who, he had reason to believe, was somewhere in the great city.

"We were both stopping at the Hotel de Louvre and being old friends we naturally sought each other's company. Thus it was that during the next few days we ran around together almost all the time. We used to come here every night in the hope that he might see her, since she had once been fond of the place, and he felt certain that if she were in Paris she would come back."

"Did she?" asked the man from Wall street.

The young consul continued, deliberately ignoring the interruption. "On these nights he drank and talked of his wife. In this way I learned his story. I gathered from what he said that he had first met Jeanne while stationed at Bordeaux.

"She was unusually pretty with her great staring blue eyes, blue as the skies of southern Italy, set wide apart on either side of her small turned-up nose. And hair, black as the night and very soft. Never was there a daintier, smaller mouth with lips of carmine; yes, she was beautiful, very beautiful. They loved each other at first sight, he told me, and it nearly killed them when he had to leave.

"As soon as the war was over they were married and Fitzpatrick bought an old chateau just outside of Paris. There they lived happily for a year. All day they would wander over the spacious grounds of the chateau or go from one large room to another making up stories about them, just as two children. Each night they attended the theater or the Opera and always before going home they would come here. The old barkeeper became very fond of Jeanne and he used to bring out for them certain rare old wines that the other guest never knew he possessed.

"After they had been married a year young Fitzpatrick decided to have Jeanne's portrait painted; so he set out to find the best portrait painter in Paris. Peyronet was recommended to him. Fitzpatrick liked Peyronet from the first for he was a handsome fellow with black hair, black eyes, and the manners of a prince. A good natured fellow he was too; so he was engaged to paint eJeanne's portrait for a consideration of fifteen thousand francs.

"Every day he came out to work on the picture. Every day saw the bond of friendship between him and the Fitzpatricks become a little stronger. He often stayed for dinner and afterwards the three used to drive to Paris in Jimmy's big car and go out somewhere together.

"Even when the picture was finished Peyronet continued to visit young Fitzpatrick and Jeanne, but Jimmy never suspected perfidy. He thought of Peyronet only as his best friend and since he liked him, he urged him to come as often as he could. If he had not worshiped Jeanne to the exclusion of all else he would, perhaps, have noticed that she was not so happy as she had been at first and that she was gayest when Peyronet was there. He would have noticed that when the artist wasn't there she was abstracted and given a brooding, also that she never suggested a party of any kind in which there was no place for Peyronet.

"After a while he did observe that Jeanne was less care-free and joyous, but he blamed himself for his neglect of her, and began to spend more money to bring the smile back to her lips and the sparkle back to her eyes; but all to no avail. At last he decided that it must be due to poor health; so he planned to take her to southern Italy. When he told her of his plans she objected, saying that she had never felt better. She even joked with him about his worrying over her and attempted again her old gay ringing laugh, but all the while she had such a sorrowful look in her eyes that he was more than ever convinced that he was doing the right thing for her."

"Poor devil," confided Mullins to himself.

"The day arrived on which they were to leave Paris. All preparations were completed for the departure. About ten o'clock in the morning Fitzpatrick drove to Paris to get their tickets and to check their luggage. He did not reach home till nearly two o'clock in the afternoon. When he did get there Jeanne was gone. The only explanation being a small note saying that she could stand it no longer, that she loved Peyronet and that she was leaving with him."

"What did he do then?" asked the man from Wall street.

"He drove at once to the Gare de Lyon in Paris, thinking that they might have taken a train for Madrid, since he had heard Peyronet say that he had spent two years there when he first began to study art. But no one remembered having seen anyone answering to his descriptions of them. He went to all the other stations, but with the same result. No one had seen them. Thinking that they might have gone to a hotel believing he would not look for them there he inquired at both the Hotel de Louvre and the Hotel de Meurice, but they were not at either of them. He hired detectives, still they were not able to locate neither his wife nor the painter. Once having heard that they were in Athens he went there. The trip was in vain, for already they had gone away when he arrived. It was the same in Cairo and in many other places; they had always just left. At last the news reached him that they were in Paris, so he came back, and here I met him."

The young consul paused to take a sip of the Porte.

"Did he ever find her?" asked Mullins.

Apparently the young consul did not hear him, that is, he gave no sign of it if he did, for he again took up his story. "One night while we were here a lieutenant that Fitzpatrick had known during the war came in, and Jimmy called him to our table.

"The lieutenant knowing of Fitzpatrick's love affair while the War was going on asked: 'Say, Fitzpatrick, when did you break with the little French doll?'"

"About a year ago," replied Jimmy, "Why?"

"Well, I saw her in here about three weeks ago with some black-haired—.' Then noticing Fitzpatrick's interest the lieutenant paused. 'Why what's the matter?' he asked. 'One would think that you were still in love with her.'

"Nothing," replied Fitzpatrick, 'but go on!' In his excitement his face had become flushed and his hands were tightly clenched as he half

From 1911 to 1913 Dr. Uphof was instructor in botany and director of the botanic garden of the Michigan Agricultural College. From 1913 to 1918 he was professor of botany and plant breeding at the state University of Arizona and was botanist to the agricultural experiment station where he conducted plant breeding work in alfalfa, date palm, cotton and sorghum. For some time he was in charge of the plant disease survey of that state.

From 1919 until 1921 he was director of the experiment station for genetics and plant breeding, near Amsterdam, Holland, where he was in charge of the breeding of sugar beets, oats, barley, wheat, flax and certain species of fruit. On account of the high taxes imposed in the Netherlands, he returned to the United States and has been connected with Rollins college since 1922, being one of the many golden personality professors of that institution.

Foreign governments have requested Dr. Uphof to make investigations on various matters several times.

In 1920 the Director of the British Department of Agriculture asked him to make an extensive report on the plant disease control in the Netherlands. In 1922 the same department asked him to send a detail report on tropical and subtropical fruit growing in Florida. The following year he conducted during his vacation research work in Cuba at the request of the director of the government agricultural experiment station near Havana, making investigations on the cassava, cocoa plant, banana and other tropical plants.

Dr. Uphof is member of the advisory committee of the German Tropical Agricultural Association in Berlin and has frequently made investigations on tropical conditions in Florida, Cuba, Mexico, Arizona and California for that committee.

Professor Uphof is the author of "Die Pflanzengattungen" (The Plant This work contains for the first time Genera) published in Leipzig 1910, an enumeration of all known plants.

be at least twenty participants. Finally, however, seven manuscripts were handed over to the judges. Since this is the first year of the M. Flossie Hill contest, Professor Harris, head of the English department of Rollins, has expressed himself as highly satisfied with the results.

These are some of the remarks of the judges sent in with their final judgements:

"These young people deserve credit."—Dr. Colledge.

"On the whole I think the stories far above the average, and am greatly pleased with talent evinced by them."—Mrs. E. W. Packard.

"These stories are much better than many we read in the magazines today. Most of them should be able to sell."—Mrs. Vans Agnew.

These and other comments do credit to those young people who entered stories in the contest. The seven stories were: "What Price Honor," by Carolyn Mitchell; "My Lady of Dreams," by Louise Ferguson; "The Case of Jimmy Fitzpatrick" by Albert Newton; "Triumph" by Paul Hilliard; "The Little Irish Girl" by Eva Thompson; "John's Suppressed Desire" by Carter Bradford; "A Mysterious Adventure" by Florence McKay. The winning story, the "Case of Jimmy Fitzpatrick," is published elsewhere in this paper.

It is sincerely hoped that Miss Hill, one of Rollins most loyal alumna, will establish this prize for an annual contest. Rollins is situated in a literary center, and when such high-minded people further literary interests they are doing much to further the cultural training of which Rollins so proudly boasts.

Much credit is due Mrs. Harris, who instructs the short story class. She has developed from "raw material" boasting nothing but ambition, a really promising set of story writers.
