Christina Torres:

Hi everyone and Welcome to Futures in Languages, a podcast showcasing stories from UCF's Modern Languages and Literatures Department alumni. I'm Christina Torres, and on behalf of our Alumni Engagement Committee, I'd like to welcome you to season three of Futures in Languages. Welcome to our Fall 2022 season. We took a bit of break last year while I finished my dissertation, and I'm happy to bring the podcast back this fall. We have some great episodes coming up this season with stories about language learning and the opportunities language learning opens. We also have special featured guest coming up who's going to talk about her journey as a lifelong learner. This season I'll encourage listeners to ask questions about language learning through our department email. It's listed below, modernlanguages@ucf.edu. Who knows, you might hear your question answered by one of our featured guests in a feature episode. It's always a pleasure to feature our department alumni as they share their stories. If you're new to our podcast, welcome. If you're a returning listener, thank you for coming back. Please enjoy the stories coming up in the next few weeks. Thank you for listening to this intro episode of Season Three in Futures in Languages. I'd like to give a shout out to Da Video Guy for our intro and outro music downloaded from freesound.org. I'm your host, Christina Torres. Tune in next time to hear more alumni stories from modern languages. For more information about our language programs in the Modern Languages Department, please visit our website at mll.cah.ucf.edu.
