If you have suggestions or comments, please share them through the Online Suggestion Box on our homepage: <http://library.ucf.edu/rosen>

Finally, be sure to check the Rosen Library Blog for future news and updates.

You can find the Blog on our homepage and on the desktop on PCs in the library.

If You Build It, They Will Come: The Scope and Impact of Sports Tourism

On Display
January—May 2010

In recent years, research in the area of sports tourism has expanded greatly, investigating everything from event marketing to economic impacts to the sociocultural implications of various types of sports tourism.

No matter which angle you explore, sports tourism is undeniably big business. The annual U.S. market for sports-based travel is $44.5 billion, according to Sports Business Journal. Communities that plan carefully can reap significant benefits from hosting sporting events, including luring new visitors and businesses to an area and enhancing a destination's attractiveness.

To learn more, check out our new exhibit on sports tourism — If You Build It, They Will Come — which focuses on such timely topics as the Winter Olympics and Spring Training. It'll leave you cheering for more!
