BOR Okays Racial Mix

By Jose Rodriguez

The Florida Board of Regents gave their approval to six name changes aimed at ending racial segregation in the state university system. The recommendations will be implemented during a five-year period.

The submitting of a desegregation plan was made by the Florida Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) in conjunction with a court order from a U.S. District Court in Washington. Other states besides Florida are included in the civil litigation which seeks to enforce Title IV of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Most of the problem in this state directly involves Florida A&M University where 97.2 percent of the student population is black.

The admissions policy of Florida A&M places virtually no restriction in obtaining a high school diploma for entering freshmen.

However, the other state universities, which are predominantly white, have a policy of admitting students who score at least 300 out of a possible 450 points on the Florida Twelfth Grade Placement Test.

Another factor which at present discourages students from attending Florida A&M is the duplication of academic programs with that of predominantly white universities.

At present, the state defines the purpose of Florida A&M, the only public university with a black leadership in minority (Continued on Page 3).

Beer Sale Predicted In 6 Weeks

By David Foster

The SALE of beer on campus could be realized within six weeks, said Leonard Ivey, state license supervisor.

Ivey said the two requirements that FTU must meet in order to apply for a state license to sell beer are the favorable ruling of the Orange County Board of Commissioners and the permission of the Florida Board of Regents.

Both requirements have already been met according to Dr. W. Rex Brown, vice-president for student affairs.

The ORANGE COUNTY Board of Commissioners have stated they do not intend to interpose any objections to the planned sale of beer and malt liquor on the FTU campus.

County Commissioner Paul Pickett said the board has taken the position that it will not exercise jurisdiction over the use of lands that are both owned and actively controlled by the state.

"This position is not a new one," said Pickett, "it has just never been applied to a parallel issue, at least not in Orange County."

Pickett cited as an example the manner in which the board relinquished jurisdiction over Sunland Hospital when the administration there wanted to initiate programs which were in conflict with their zoning.

"Perhaps to the conclusion that local government is only a branch of state government and that in cases such as these we should defer authority to it," said Pickett.

Pickett said the position taken by the board was, in his opinion, neither major nor controversial.

"The sale of beer at FTU will be beneficial and certainly not detrimental to the community," he said. "It is definitely not detrimental to Orange County citizens," said Pickett.

However, Steve Bechtel, a county attorney, said that the board is dealing in a questionable area. He said there are conflicting opinions from the attorney general concerning the legal authority of the board to take such action.

ixon Speaks At Commencement

By Jose Rodriguez

FTU's spring commencement exercises drew a crowd of approximately 12,000 people to see and hear President Richard Nixon speak. President Nixon's address to the graduating students was the subject of much prior speculation by the local and national media.

At present, the students were seated in an uplifted and thoroughly scrubbed reflecting pond. A press box was constructed to accommodate the media at a cost of $121 from materials which were already on the grounds.

Rex Brown, vice president for student affairs, said that any price for having the President of the United States is always worth the price.

THE PRESIDENT'S speech dealt with topics ranging from foreign to domestic problems. Nixon stressed what was right with America in what he said was a speech of realism.

Security Precautions taken for the President's visit involved the coordination and cooperation of state and local law enforcement with the Secret Service.

Cut Imminent In Activities

By Torrey Stewart

STUDENT services and activities at FTU may face drastic cuts for the coming fiscal year because of significantly curtailed funding.

According to Dr. W. Rex Brown, vice president for student affairs, student organizations as a whole have requested almost twice the total amount of funds available, which is approximately $600,000.

The Activity and Service Fee Committee's recommended budget made last week is approximately $120,000 less for the coming fiscal year than last year's budget.

According to Dr. C. W. Brown, assistant vice president for student affairs, reasons for the trend to drop in funds available include smaller projected enrollments and a marked decrease in carry-over funds from previous years' enrollments.

These funds are dependent on enrollment projections because they are necessary to cover the $34.80 slice of each full-time student's tuition fee. It is combined into a single account which is then distributed to campus accounts on the basis of their estimated importance and need.

Over twenty accounts are funded by the monies, including the Village Center (VC), the Student Health Service, Student Government and intercollegiate athletics.

Although the recommended budget is still tentative and must be approved by the FTU Board of Trustees, several directors of university services and activities face cutbacks which they feel are unnecessary.

LOCAL congresswoman Lou Frey, Washington, was a guest of Nixon to be present for the graduation ceremony.

Participants on the banners were varied. Vedis Berry, an anti-Nixon supporter, at the ceremonies, said "I'm not with him politically, but I was embarrassed by the sign held by Nixon.

The ceremonies were presented by the graduating students and their families. However, several banners and signs appeared both favoring and criticizing Nixon.

On the other hand, Paul Jackson, also an FTU student, who freely admitted she was anti-Nixon, said that the ceremonies were an appropriate place for the signs and banners. Regardless of politics, the President's visit provided an opportunity for nationwide recognition and may have a long-range benefit for FTU.

John E. Corvee, vice president for business affairs, said that the national publicity received by the university tends to support the name FTU as opposed to any of the other name changes.
AFTER PAYING tuition and fees, there is perhaps one area of expense in higher education which may present a substantial problem to students. This area is the college yearbook. Tuition, textbooks, student activity fees, and food costs are all areas where most students easily spend a great deal of money. But the yearbook is often the area students find hardest to afford.

He talked of the POWs and of shaking hands "with every one of them, as they came back, standing straight, saluting the flag of the United States, saying 'God bless America.'" Nixon expanded his praise to include their wives and mothers as well. Nixon also made use of logical appeals. For example, he supported his position that the United States should not unilaterally reduce its armaments for this would negate any incentive for other nations to reduce theirs. His use of evidence in support of his logic was limited to a few personal examples and one statistic concerning the possibilities for increased food production in Latin America.

Although, traditionally, logical and emotional appeals were considered to be two separate elements, modern speakers have recognized that they cannot really be separated. Many of Nixon’s appeals were obviously mixtures of appeals. The most obvious example is found in his reference to nuclear disarmament negotiations. "I say to you very simply, keep America strong, having in mind that a strong America is no threat to peace, it is a guarantee to the peace, and keep America strong and never send the President of the United States in the negotiating table as the head of the second strongest nation of the world."

As just as he appealed to our reasoning, so he appealed also to our national pride as a "strong" nation.

A basic criticism of Nixon’s speech is that when he attempted to support his points with some reasoning, he was very selective. He left a great deal unsaid, which is perhaps why commentators have said little about Nixon’s speech.

Sincerely,

detrimental to their department.

If the committee's recommendations remain unaltered, the Village Center will suffer the greatest loss of all campus programs, receiving approximately $100,000 less than the department's total request for the coming fiscal year. The VC requested more than any other department. The VC is not alone in large cuts, as the Student Health Center stands to lose $70,000 and intramurals $65,000.

A few accounts were even dropped. The university yearbook, the Pigskin, which was funded last year for about $21,000 was deleted by the committee.

Dr. Ken Lawson, director of the VC, said that the VC has no plans for the summer because of the tentative budget cut. Large concerts and expensive speakers would be eliminated, and exhibits, the speaker's program and the performing arts would be reduced if the committee's recommended budget is approved.

Added that that cutsbacks are generally not as drastic as this year's proposal by the committee. He explained that a 25 per cent cut in funds for the VC would be imposed, leaving a 50 per cent cut.

As FTN now stands, the budget would place great demands on the staff in terms of time, energy and personal response. If the recommended budget is approved, Lawson plans to cope by utilizing local and university talent and scheduling smaller, less expensive programs. More classes with increased individual participation will be offered in arts and crafts.

The budget proposed by the committee for the intramural-extramural program will definitely throw us back two years from the program the department wanted to offer, said Ken Renner, director of intramurals and recreation.

OPERATING the office and maintaining present administrative personnel will be extremely difficult, but possible, said Renner. At this point he foresees cutting almost all student positions in the office.

"Quality is becoming an endangered factor in our programs as a result of the cutback," Renner said.

An alternative to the budget cut is for the possibility of the student body, through SG, assuming tuition for recreational and competitive programs. He cited an example of the University of Illinois, which through a student-appointed bond issue, built a $1.2 million intramural recreational complex.

Proper and unique, he said, be he would propose and stand by this alternative.

THE STUDENT Health Service could also be seriously affected if the recommended budget is approved.

ACCORDING to Dr. Edward W. Stoner, director of the health center, the reduced budget could result in the curtailment of 24-hour health service and increase in waiting time for patients.

"IT will not hurt us that much. To be honest, I think it will be the best thing for the university," Constantine added. He said that SG will have to use "two hands rather than money."

Scholarships, graduation announcements and the annual picnic, all offered in the past through SG funding, will not be possible in the next coming fiscal year.

WHEN asked how the university as a whole would be affected by these cuts, Dr. C. W. Brown stated that it is impossible to predict at this point. He said, "I would project that what happens... is that having less money does not mean, by itself, that you cannot carry a program, it means you will have to look for a different way."

Ex-Student Sings Post Grad Blues

By Michael Basile

"I really have to admit to myself that the whole thing might just have been a waste of time, and that's very hard for me to accept," said Daughty graduated.

Richard Daughty is 26. He graduated from FTU last quarter but is unemployed. Like thousands of other college graduates, Daughty is finding out the college diploma is not opening the doors he believed it would when he first began his education.

"I didn't want to fly," he continued, "but it almost seems as if the whole thing was a giant myth perpetuated on the student. When I got out of the service, I really had nothing else I wanted to do. I really did want to go to school." Daughty, who was drafted and spent two years in the U.S. Army, used the G.I. Bill benefits to get through school.

"I guess you might say I really believed the way to get a good paying job was to have a college diploma."

"It's almost to the point where I don't even have enough money left to buy guitar strings any more," Daughty remarked. "Luckily the standard of living I'm accustomed to is not very high, so I'm not feeling the pinch like some of these graduates are."

It is obvious, however, that Daughty is feeling the pinch of jobs. Daughty is looking for a full-time job. He has an apartment in Winter Park, food is expensive and it costs money to keep a car running.

He put a cigarette and continued talking about his situation, particularly his luck in finding a job in Orlando.

"For the first two weeks after I graduated, I hit all the better employment agencies around town hoping there would be that interesting job with half-decent pay that I wouldn't mind doing for awhile. I was pretty well aware of what the job market around this area was like for a grad with a psychology degree," Daughty said.

"There are jobs around, working with retarded children or at the Florida Sanitarium. There are also jobs that require some dedication and offer fairly small salaries."

"I'm not really sure if that's where it's at for me right now," he continued. "If I were to re-enroll, I would try another four years of living hand-to-mouth. Job market is really glutted down here. There is not something that would be interesting anyway."

"Some of the jobs that I considered taking even had master's degree applying for them. The employment agencies were not too much help. Either the jobs they could have helped me get were just not what I wanted or they wanted the old armadillo-cum-badger type.

"I could always go out and get a job in some construction field, but that's what I went to school for. I could work with my head and my knowledge instead of with my back."

"Finally, I went down to state offices and took the social worker civil service test," Daughty continued. "The money isn't too bad and I think I might enjoy the work. But the test was one of those kind that there is no way to study for it and I really don't know how I did. I should get the results soon."

"But this job may not be the answer either, particularly since there are so many people applying for these positions that the state takes only the best qualified people with the highest scores."

Daughty dumped down into the chair and nodded his head with disgust and bewilderment.

"If I don't do well on the test, I don't know what I'm going to do. I guess I could always get a regular job and struggle through graduate school. But I have a feeling that by the time I graduated with a doctorate, the job market might be just as filled with Ph.D.'s as it is now with bachelor's degrees and there would still be no place to go," he said with a sigh.

"I don't know if I could face that at all."
CONSTRUCTION ON the Humanities and Fine Arts building officially began June 5. The building will be ready for occupancy sometime during the summer of 1974, said Clayt.on, director of University Physical Planning.

Beer

But Bech tel agreed that it is generally true that local zoning does not apply to state-owned land.

Ivey said FTU will have to present a certificate of operation, personnel data sheets and a sketch of the premises of the beer selling facility.

Beer will be sold in the university snack bar as soon as possible after the state license is obtained, said Brown. "The target date is the middle of September or sooner," said Brown.

FTU will be the seventh of nine state universities to sell beer on campus.

One requirement was met two weeks ago when Florida Board of Regents Chancellor Robert B. Mautz authorized FTU to go ahead and apply for a beer sales license.

BROWN said the university attorney, John D. Mahaffey, is handling the case and will probably file an application for a license when he returns from vacation.

Brown said the university food service is expected to be the license holder. If so, processing of the university’s application will take about six weeks because of necessary paperwork, research and fingerprinting of the applicants.

The state license will cost the university $200 annually.

A FEDERAL liquor license must also be obtained by the administration. The particular license needed costs $24 annually. The license procedure takes three months but the university may begin the sale of beer as soon as it is licensed by the state, provided it has filed for the federal license.

Much paperwork is involved in obtaining these licenses, said Ivey. FTU will have to present a certificate of operation, personnel data sheets and a sketch of the premises of the beer selling facility.
