Central Florida Future, June 25, 1997

6-25-1997

Find similar works at: https://stars.library.ucf.edu/centralfloridafuture

University of Central Florida Libraries http://library.ucf.edu

Part of the Mass Communication Commons, Organizational Communication Commons, Publishing Commons, and the Social Influence and Political Communication Commons

Recommended Citation

https://stars.library.ucf.edu/centralfloridafuture/1372

This Newsletter is brought to you for free and open access by the University Archives at STARS. It has been accepted for inclusion in Central Florida Future by an authorized administrator of STARS. For more information, please contact lee.dotson@ucf.edu.
Build it and they will come

By SEAN CLAEYS
Staff Writer

There was a time when word came around that a new fitness facility would be built in the near future. Then there was another time and another, and now the future is here but a new fitness facility isn’t.

Dr. Kay Stanney, industrial engineering professor and aerobics instructor at UCF, has pointed out, the workout room, aerobics center, and the overall recreational services provided for students and faculty is a wonderful bonus to the work done by the recreational services staff, namely Joanne Piernall, director of the fitness center. Though Stanney and others are content with their cardiovascular workout area, the vast majority wants more.

According to the Director of Recreational Services, Loren Knutson, “When athletic or academic recruits are looking at colleges, the fitness gym is the third most important reason for their decision.”

“We don’t even show out our hole-in-the-wall gym, that was created by sealing up half of our cafeteria, on our campus tour. Where as the gym at E. Carolina, UF, FSU, Georgia, and South FL are becoming key stops for bringing in the new recruits.”

Jason Rastian, one of the staff members at UCF’s gym, said the consensus of gym goers say there is not enough room in the tiny workout area or aerobics room. Plus the aging equipment is wearing out and breaking.

Student Dominic Calpe best described the gym with one word, “Outdated.” He went on to say his old high school weight room is better than UCF’s, and much less crowded. Nicole Griffin not only agreed that the gym is crowded, but so packed she was like a brain surgeon charge of Fisher’s counseling program. Fisher will live on in the hearts of those who knew him and on campus he will be remembered for his knack for soothing emotional pain and being, simply, an incredible human being.

“Pete” Fisher, a political science instructor, founder of UCF’s peer counseling and founder of UCF’s Lambda Chi Alpha Chapter died Sunday, June 1 in his Oviedo home. The cause of death was a brain infection. He was only 51.

Fisher, born and raised in Oviedo, began teaching political science at UCF during its inaugural year in 1968 as a resident teacher living in a men’s dorm. However, he left his teaching job to serve his country in the Vietnam War.

Upon his return, Fisher earned a doctorate in education administration from Florida State University and went back to UCF in 1976 to continue teaching. The early 1980’s brought Fisher to school once again, this time as a student. Fisher received his master’s in counseling education from UCF and thus began his career as a UCF counselor.

“He was like a brain surgeon without surgical tools and he could fix broken hearts,” said friend Eric Young. “There are lots of counselors, but few that are as outstanding a human being as Pete.”

Fisher eventually established a private practice as a family therapist, and created a program at UCF where senior students offered counseling to younger ones.

Dr. Pete Fisher’s life uplifted thousands at UCF

By NORA R. KULIESH
Managing Editor

Kenneth E. “Pete” Fisher, a political science instructor, founder of UCF’s peer counseling program and founder of UCF’s Lambda Chi Alpha Chapter died Sunday, June 1 in his Oviedo home. The cause of death was a brain infection. He was only 51.

Fisher, born and raised in Oviedo, began teaching political science at UCF during its inaugural year in 1968 as a resident teacher living in a men’s dorm. However, he left his teaching job to serve his country in the Vietnam War.

Upon his return, Fisher earned a doctorate in education administration from Florida State University and went back to UCF in 1976 to continue teaching. The early 1980’s brought Fisher to school once again, this time as a student. Fisher received his master’s in counseling education from UCF and thus began his career as a UCF counselor.

“He was like a brain surgeon without surgical tools and he could fix broken hearts,” said friend Eric Young. “There are lots of counselors, but few that are as outstanding a human being as Pete.”

Fisher eventually established a private practice as a family therapist, and created a program at UCF where senior students offered counseling to younger ones.

Through the programs Fisher created and his personal attention to those in need, friends say he touched the lives of thousands.

Tom Messina, executive director of the UCF Alumni Association, was a graduate student who worked for Fisher in charge of Fisher’s counseling program.

“I have known him for 15 years,” Messina said. “He could really captivate. He understood the human psyche.”

Fisher was best known on campus for his knack for soothing emotional pain and being, simply, an incredible human being.

“He had this incredible ability to make anyone he came in contact with feel very, very special,” said long-time friend Joyce Clampitt, a UCF Administrator. Clampitt says Fisher had many passions which included people, books, movies and plants.

“He is probably the most incredibly sensitive and caring individual I have known,” added Clampitt.

Fisher will live on in the hearts of those who knew him and on campus he will be remembered for his wonderful service and dedication, to those he counseled, as well as the brothers of Lambda Chi Alpha.

Donations can be made to the Dr. Pete Fisher Endowed Scholarship by contacting the UCF Foundation, 249-4740.

Dr. Kay Stanney, industrial engineering professor and aerobics instructor at UCF, has pointed out, the workout room, aerobics center, and the overall recreational services provided for students and faculty is a wonderful bonus to the work done by the recreational services staff, namely Joanne Piernall, director of the fitness center. Though Stanney and others are content with their cardiovascular workout area, the vast majority wants more.

According to the Director of Recreational Services, Loren Knutson, “When athletic or academic recruits are looking at colleges, the fitness gym is the third most important reason for their decision.”

“We don’t even show out our hole-in-the-wall gym, that was created by sealing up half of our cafeteria, on our campus tour. Where as the gym at E. Carolina, UF, FSU, Georgia, and South FL are becoming key stops for bringing in the new recruits.”

Jason Rastian, one of the staff members at UCF’s gym, said the consensus of gym goers say there is not enough room in the tiny workout area or aerobics room. Plus the aging equipment is wearing out and breaking.

Student Dominic Calpe best described the gym with one word, “Outdated.” He went on to say his old high school weight room is better than UCF’s, and much less crowded. Nicole Griffin not only agreed that the gym is crowded, but so packed she was like a brain surgeon charge of Fisher’s counseling program. Fisher will live on in the hearts of those who knew him and on campus he will be remembered for his knack for soothing emotional pain and being, simply, an incredible human being.

“Pete” Fisher, a political science instructor, founder of UCF’s peer counseling and founder of UCF’s Lambda Chi Alpha Chapter died Sunday, June 1 in his Oviedo home. The cause of death was a brain infection. He was only 51.

Fisher, born and raised in Oviedo, began teaching political science at UCF during its inaugural year in 1968 as a resident teacher living in a men’s dorm. However, he left his teaching job to serve his country in the Vietnam War.

Upon his return, Fisher earned a doctorate in education administration from Florida State University and went back to UCF in 1976 to continue teaching. The early 1980’s brought Fisher to school once again, this time as a student. Fisher received his master’s in counseling education from UCF and thus began his career as a UCF counselor.

“He was like a brain surgeon without surgical tools and he could fix broken hearts,” said friend Eric Young. “There are lots of counselors, but few that are as outstanding a human being as Pete.”

Fisher eventually established a private practice as a family therapist, and created a program at UCF where senior students offered counseling to younger ones.

Through the programs Fisher created and his personal attention to those in need, friends say he touched the lives of thousands.

Tom Messina, executive director of the UCF Alumni Association, was a graduate student who worked for Fisher in charge of Fisher’s counseling program.

“I have known him for 15 years,” Messina said. “He could really captivate. He understood the human psyche.”

Fisher was best known on campus for his knack for soothing emotional pain and being, simply, an incredible human being.

“He had this incredible ability to make anyone he came in contact with feel very, very special,” said long-time friend Joyce Clampitt, a UCF Administrator. Clampitt says Fisher had many passions which included people, books, movies and plants.

“He is probably the most incredibly sensitive and caring individual I have known,” added Clampitt.

Fisher will live on in the hearts of those who knew him and on campus he will be remembered for his wonderful service and dedication, to those he counseled, as well as the brothers of Lambda Chi Alpha.

Donations can be made to the Dr. Pete Fisher Endowed Scholarship by contacting the UCF Foundation, 249-4740.
Traffic violation leads police to ‘deadbeat dad’

By DAN TUCKER
Staff Writer

On June 7, Darrell Alexander Price was pulled over for a traffic violation, according to UCFPD reports. After officers released the vehicle, Dispatch informed the officers that Price had a felony warrant for his arrest. Police stopped again on June 12, after observing Price, who matched the description of the felony warrant, get into his vehicle. Darrell Alexander Price was arrested for driving with a suspended license and for child support delinquency.

A routine check of the second occupant of the vehicle, Kevin Orlando Jones, revealed an active warrant for his arrest as well. Price and Jones were taken into custody and transferred to Orange County Jail.

In other campus crime reported by the UCFPD:

*Sabri James Hammad reported a burglary and grand theft after he discovered $210 worth of Craftsmen tools were missing from the Engineering Building on June 10. Hammad said the tools, a 99 piece socket set, an electric drill and a drill bit set, were last seen locked up on May 14 in Rm 168. Hammad did not give anyone permission to use the tools.

*Christian Ferreria Lima was arrested on June 11 for driving with a license that had been suspended three times.

Students favor new UCF fitness center finds it hard to get a good work­out in. To remedy her dilemma, she enrolled herself into body building classes to lift weights in the athlete’s gym, where there is ample room and equipment.

From PAGE 1

Students in her predicament are frustrated by the antiquated gym and the lack of effort made by Student Government and the Administration.

“I pay a substantial amount of money per credit hour for student activities and recreational facilities, yet UCF is not providing us with the adequate space or equipment needed for exercising,” said Griffin.

Due to the lack of room and equipment, which causes overcrowding, Bastian stated that students are having to pay large sums of money for off campus memberships. For those who cannot afford an off campus gym, though, they are limited to what UCF provides.

Plans are in progress for the funding of a new fitness facility. It was several semesters ago that UCF was granted $11 million from the Capital Improvement Trust Fund (CITF) for expansion purposes.

Though UCF will not receive the money for almost another year, a contract was made between former Student Body President Marlin and President Hitt.

This contract, called the Marlin agreement, gives a list of plans for allocating the $11 million. Building a new recreational facility was the third on the list. Knutson said the first two priorities have been dealt with using other funds, and the recreational facility is now taking precedence.

It is simply a matter of President Hitt writing a letter to the CITF committee in Tallahassee stating UCF’s intentions for the money.

So, once again there is talk and actual planning for a new gym. A two-story fitness center with over 150,000 square feet has been sketched out. Plans to rent out parts of the facility to high schools and junior sport leagues have been considered to help pay maintenance costs. Locations have been narrowed down, and funding is within an arm’s reach.

Students will have to wait and see whether the new facility will actually break-ground. If the $11 million is allocated to the weight room, construction may begin as early as Fall of 1998.

“I hope the money goes to the weight room. I use it at least four times a week, and think it is adequate now, but it [a new building] will alleviate a lot of the overcrowding. I will keep my fingers crossed,” said senior Julie Werner.
Parents do not get a vote, but they do get a say

By NORA R. KULIESH
Managing Editor

Governor Chiles allowed the Teacher Tenure Bill to become a law on June 14, without his signature. The bill which will, for the first time, give parents an official say in the evaluation of their children's teachers and require an objective measurement of a teacher's success with students.

The bill, which some education experts and reformers say is not strong enough, goes into effect on July 1. The final version of the bill:

- Cuts from one year to 90 days the time a teacher has to correct deficiencies noted when a contract is renewed.
- Says school systems have to measure the progress a student makes under a given teacher and consider their performance in making evaluations.
- Says parent's comments have to be considered by school systems during evaluations.

UCF cadets in action

ROTC cadets participated in the last Basic Course Field Training Exercise (FTX) in Camp Blanding, near Jacksonville recently.

The Basic Course consists of UCF freshman and sophomores. Some possess ROTC scholarships, but the majority do not. The Basic Course was designed as a means for students to look into Army ROTC with no military obligation.

To participate, interested students can sign up for MIS 1031 like a normal college course. Basic Course cadets learn military leadership which includes hands-on practical exercises such as weekly labs and Field Training Exercises.

For more information about Army ROTC, call 823-3383.

Summer term library book sale

The Friends of the UCF library (FOL) will hold a book sale on Tuesday, July 15 from 10:00 am until 2:00 pm in the main lobby of the UCF library.

Due to the response to the sale of new and used textbooks, manuals, and fiction as well as an increase in the number of items, has prompted the FOL to offer a sale during summer term. Typically, those sales are held during the Fall and Spring semesters.

The books were donated to the UCF library by students, faculty, staff and friends in the community. None were purchased with state funds or tax dollars. The books represent duplicates that could not be added to the libraries collection. However, the volumes are useful to students as an inexpensive way to build their personal libraries with reference and reading material.

The monies realized through FOL book sales are used to purchase new titles for the University's collection.

ROTC cadets participate in practical field training exercises.

Library exhibit shows diverse collections

The following items will be on display in the library during the month of July:

1. Optical Spectaculars through Ordinary Lens, by Chia Hsia Chen, photographer.
2. Weight Control Without Dieting, by Terri Langford.
4. Fantasy/Horror Collection, by Special Collections and
5. Patents: Why Didn't I Think of That?, by Meg Scharf.

The following items will be on display in the library during the month of July:

1. Optical Spectaculars through Ordinary Lens, by Chia Hsia Chen, photographer.
2. Weight Control Without Dieting, by Terri Langford.
4. Fantasy/Horror Collection, by Special Collections and
5. Patents: Why Didn't I Think of That?, by Meg Scharf.
Q: 1.) Did you vote in the last Student Senate Election? Why or Why not?
2.) Did you also vote in the last Student President/ Vice President Election? Why or why not?

BY PETER KUNDIS

A:

1.) No, I didn't know any of the candidates that were running.
2.) Yes, I felt that it was important to vote in that election.

—Laurie Klugman, Junior, Elementary Education, Ft. Lauderdale

1.) No, I wasn't taking any classes during the time of the election.
2.) Yes, I felt that my particular candidate had very good intentions for the students.

—Brigida Padilla, Junior, Psychology, Winter Park

1.) No. This is my very first semester at UCF. But I do plan to vote at the next election, and at others, while I'm attending UCF.
2.) No, for the very same reason that I gave for the above question.

—Patricia Tom, Graduate Student, Environmental Engineering, Fellsmere, FL

1.) Yes. Because of the great slogans, and also the candidates were very passionate about running for office.
2.) Yes. Out of responsibility and support for both the students and also the student government.

—Katherine Kirchner, Graduate Student, Clinical Social Work, Winter Park

1.) No. Because I'm an International student, I didn't who any of the candidates were. So, I was confused, as to whom to vote for. And also I wasn't sure about what criteria to use in choosing a candidate.
2.) No, for the very same reason that I gave for the above question.

—Nimat Hague, Masters Studies, Computer Engineering, Chilagong, Bangladesh

1.) Yes. I was taking some classes during the time of the election.
2.) Yes, I felt that my particular candidate had a good program.

—Andi Cowell, Graduate Studies, Industrial Engineering, Manchester, England

“I DON’T DO WEEKENDS.”

“Because working part-time at UPS… I don’t have to. They have five-day schedules that leave your weekends free. Work morning, noon, or night hours that work around your class schedule. And get paid holidays and vacations.

“That’s plenty of time to study or recharge. And I make plenty too… almost $10,000 a year for working about 4 hours a day. UPS knows students value time as much as money.

“At UPS, most students work in Operations and some in Accounting, Industrial Engineering, I. S. and Customer Service. So if you don’t do weekends, do contact UPS.”

Applicants are being considered for your local UPS office. For interviews or more information about UPS, see your school’s career development or job placement center. UPS is an equal opportunity employer.

CONTACT YOUR SCHOOL’S CAREER RESOURCE CENTER

WORKING FOR STUDENTS WHO WORK FOR US.
UPS DELIVERS EDUCATION
College radio is not what it used to be ... it's jazzy

By JASON HEIRONIMUS
Opinion Editor

At one time college radio was the last bastion of experimental radio. Eventually it garnered its own genre of music. Through the experimental '60s and up to the late '80s a college student could resort to the safety of college radio. Often in order to listen to the many different types of people attending a university the station would be forced to offer something for everyone. From folk to r&b to indian chants, every student could find an eclectic mix to listen to on America's college campuses. But sometimes, some college radio stations just can't seem to get it right.

Orlando has a fairly large radio market. With the five buttons on my 1986 factory car radio I am able to receive five average radio stations, which will produce at least one good song at any time of the day. So, I am a slave to my car radio. I thrive on my radio.

What I would love, however, is if I could discover some new music not via MTV or the commercial radio which Orlando offers. A smart thinking individual might think, "Hmm, UCF needs more stuff for the students ... College students tend to like music. College students tend to listen to music. Wait a minute, what about a college radio station which would cater to all the different interests of UCF's diverse student body? What a great idea!"

Instead if seems as if someone has taken that idea, and instead thought, "Hmmm, UCF needs more stuff for the students ... College students tend to like music. College students tend to listen to music. Wait a minute, what about a college radio station which would cater to all the interests of UCF's diverse student body, and just play JAZZ!!!"

—Jason Heironimus

"What about a college radio station which would cater to all the interests of UCF's diverse student body, and just play JAZZ!!!"

—JASON HEIRONIMUS

By JASON HEIRONIMUS
Opinion Editor

With the advent of the phonograph in the dark ages people no longer had to resort to their own voices for music. Instead they could play a scratchy record, listen real close, and get a small piece of happiness blurted out by a bad speaker type thing.

Then came the record player, and the sound quality got tremendously better, which enabled listeners to get away totally new out of their desired music. After that of course came the infamous 8-track, which got a lot of people to be able to boogie down in their very own Pontiac. In the '80s we realized how ridiculous 8-tracks were and switched to the smaller, more compact cassette. And finally, in the technologically-entrenched '90s, we prefer compact discs for our listening pleasure.

But don't worry, I haven't forgotten about the most important invention in the history of the music, the radio. Today, the radio has become almost obsolete. Consumers want nice stereo systems with CD players, so they can pick and choose what they listen to. Unfortunately, however, some people are forced to listen to the radio for lack of funds to buy one of those nice stereo systems. Being in college, a student in this predicament might want to turn to their college radio station.

As you may have figured out by now, if you didn't know already, UCF's only college radio station is a jazz oriented station. They have jazz in the morning, jazz at night, and jazz during the day. At WUCF the jazz is plentiful and over flowing. No one can say that at our campus radio station there is a shortage of jazz.

Sister Hazel and the Dave Matthews Band got started? Opportunity is knocking, but with such a limited format as basically one type of music the student body will never get behind WUCF.
Nation

Family overcomes poverty to earn degrees

By COLLEEN DE BAISE
College Press Service

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.—Rafiq Jeffries had every excuse not to graduate from college. His home is Philadelphia’s gritty Germantown, a place enveloped in poverty, despair and drug addiction. When he was younger, he and his eight brothers and sisters struggled to scrape together money for food after a family tragedy left them without parents or an income.

“I wore sweatsuits—the same sweatsuits—the first two years of high school,” Jeffries, now 23, recalls with a laugh, in a conversation two days before receiving his degree May 19 from the University of Virginia.

With graduation near and a Virginia spring touching the campus, it was easy to be lighthearted. But the family’s situation worsened in 1985, when Jeffries’ father, Michael, committed suicide. His mother, Gail, who had a history of depression, mentally withdrew from the world; his father, Rafiq, lost his job and turned to drug addiction.

Suddenly the Jeffries siblings, whose ages ranged from 8 to 23, were forced to raise themselves. It sounds a bit like the plot of Fox’s “Party of Five,” except this real-life story involves nine children living in Philadelphia’s inner city, not San Francisco’s tony Pacific Heights.

“Things were already difficult,” Jeffries says. “Then they really collapsed.”

By the time he was 13, Jeffries was working three or four jobs after school, getting home after midnight. Sometimes, the house he shared with his eight brothers and sisters was without heat or electricity. Often, there was no food. Jeffries says. “When people think of poverty, I don’t think they have a really good image of what it is. We were hungry, it was hard as we worked. There were days when we didn’t eat.”

Jeffries knew there was one way out: education. And that’s what he wrote on his application to U.Va., that the family turmoil “was slowly pulling toward the oblivion of the fast money and drugs. So I had to make a decision and ask myself if I was still on the road I wanted to take—and I decided it was not.”

What makes this story so amazing is the fact that Jeffries is only one of four family members to be graduating this year. Jeffries will receive a master’s degree in teaching; his younger brother, Jeremiah, 21, will earn a bache­lor’s degree in psychology, also from U.Va. At Temple University, older sister Bayyinah, 26, will graduate cum laude with a bachelor’s degree in elementary education. An older brother, Lovell, 32, will earn a master’s degree in health care administration and financial management from Temple. Another sister, Shahidah, 27, has been accepted at Harvard University and will start a Ph.D. program in divinity and education in the fall. She’s a graduate of Haverford College.

Three other siblings—Mikal, Gabriella and Eva Marie—are still in high school. “They’re going to college. We’re going to work hard, whatever it takes,” Jeffries says. “They’re warriors. They’re survivors, too.”

Jeffries says he never doubted he would finish his degree, even during pretty dark moments. “I didn’t have a choice whether I was going to finish,” he said. “I wasn’t going to go back to my family and say I failed. No way.”

But the close-knit siblings struggled to raise themselves, he remembers. “The rule was, you listen to the person above you,” Jeffries says.

His brother Jeremiah adds, “And you are responsible for the ones younger than you. We were determined to make it. We were determined to beat poverty and anything else that came our way. We had our parents’ spirituality, even if we didn’t have them actively with us.”

Lorenzo, the eldest brother, now 35, quit school and went to work for food. The other older children stayed in school, but took odd jobs around the neighborhood. Shahidah, the oldest sister, tutored the younger children in writing and mathematics.

“Education was the vehicle, devotion to each other was the drive,” says Jeffries as he explains how his siblings managed.

As they worked to complete their degrees, more hardships surfaced. The family was evicted from its home in 1993, and the remaining siblings scattered throughout the city with friends and relatives.

Jeffries says he never doubted he would finish his degree, even during pretty dark moments. “I didn’t have a choice whether I was going to finish,” he said. “I wasn’t going to go back to my family and say I failed. No way.”

He credits his parents with instilling in him and his siblings the conviction that education is a right. Jeffries says his mother, an elementary teacher, used to tell them as they were growing up. “In order to love yourself, you have to educate yourself.” His father once served as treasurer of the Sister Clara Mohammed School, a private Muslim school he co-founded in the 1960s.

Also, “Allah wouldn’t give us everything we can’t handle,” says Jeffries, who is Muslim. “We were tested. We’re pretty good people. Even at our lowest point, we were taking in kids to live with us.”

In recent months, their mother has slowly come out of her depression and is regaining an active role in the family, their father has completed his drug rehabilitation.

“Both my mother and father are doing incredible now,” he says. “This has been a healing period for my family.”

The Jeffries family story has captured national attention, from USA Today, Chicago Tribune and even People magazine. But Jeffries says the sudden fame hasn’t distracted him or his siblings from a special goal: to start a foundation that lobbies for educational funding.

“No one should have to go through that,” he says, referring to the poverty he and his family experienced. “We have so much wealth in this country.” In two days, he and his brother will walk together across U.Va.’s stage, as their parents watch from the audience. The moment will mark not just the end of a long journey, but the beginning of a lifetime of service to others, he says. “This is just the beginning step; this passes us on to another stage of our life,” he said. “Success is definitely within our reach.

“We will be incredible; we will change the world.”

White House drops grade requirement

By COLLEEN DE BAISE
College Press Service

WASHINGTON—The Clinton administration has decided to drop its proposal requiring college students to maintain a B-minus average during their sophomore year in order to receive a $1,500 tax credit. White House press secretary Mike McCurry said the grade requirement was dropped because educators feared it would be an administrative hassle and could lead to grade inflation.

“Things have never been worse,” McCurry said, referring to the proposal, “so it’s not something we’re going to pursue.”

Wednesday, the White House formally announced a plan June 3 that would revive a tax deduction for students attending college for up to five years of college, and a separate deduction of up to $10,000 per family each year for college tuition and fees.

In addition, the White House formally announced a plan June 3 that would revive a tax deduction for student-loan interest and permanently extend a tax exemption for employer-paid tuition assistance.

Under the proposal, interest paid on student loans, up to $2,500 a year, would be deductible for up to five years. That tax break had been repealed in 1986 when Congress overhauled the federal tax code. Many Congressional Republicans favor both aspects of the White House plan. The deduction for student-loan interest had been included in the GOP’s 1995 plan to balance the federal budget, which the president vetoed.

But critics, including some Republicans, say the tax breaks could spur colleges to raise tuition. Also, they argue that the proposals could bite too deeply into tax revenue and make it harder to reduce the federal budget deficit.

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

“Don’t wait for your ship to come in... swim out to it.”

—Steven Covey

June 25, 1997

Central Florida Future • 6

Photo by DANIEL GROGAN
Looking to earn some extra money? Check out the CFF classifieds help wanted listings.

There’s a job waiting for you. Need to sell something, buy something? The CFF classifieds reaches thousands every Wednesday this summer.

Advertisements

If you love sports and can sell this job is for you. Sell advertising in the UCF Football Game Day Program. Commissions paid weekly.

Bonus:

Win a trip to see UCF play Nebraska. Call 977-1009

Services

Tying/Resume/Decking/Publishing
Take the heat off your homework deadlines. We do resumes, reports, term papers, documents, business cards, forms, publishing, etc. Best Rates Available, efficient & fast service
Call Today 249-5267

Persons

Hi! I’m a SW 22 year old. I’m hoping to go to Europe in Summer or October for 2-3 mths. Planning on getting a job as a companion. Male or Female, under 30 years old. You’ll pay your own way. For safety reasons. Serious inquiries only please. All calls returned. 601-2980

Pressure Cleaning

Residential - Commercial
Low pressure- High pressure
Roofs-Patios-Drive Ways
Pool Decks- Screens
Special UCF Discounts
Student-Alumni-Staff-Faculty

Mike Malone
Oviedo, Florida
Page 741-1231

Got a good story idea? Give our news desk a call @ 977-9396.

Attention Marketing Majors
Opportunities this fall selling advertising for the Central Florida Future. Work in a professional environment with a proven product. If you plan to be an account executive this is a great training ground. High commissions paid. This is your chance to prove to employers you’ve got what it takes to make it in sales. If you want to earn extra money while in school call the Central Florida Future to schedule an interview.

977-1009

Central Florida Future • 7
Cage and Travolta: Face to Face

By DEAN G. LEWIS

John Travolta and Nicolas Cage, by far the best-dressed action duo this summer, bring out heavy artillery for John Woo's violent and nasty "Face/Off." The former disco king and two-time Oscar nominee star as gun-crazy Sean Archer whose obsession in nailing mastermind terrorist Castor Troy (Cage) gets a ghastly face-lift when he has Troy's kisser carved out (putting laser technology to good use) and transplanted onto his own. Trouble is, Troy steals Archer's stowed-away gun and sets out to command Archer's former disco partner to help him blow some up. A wannabe bad man, Pollux walks with one shoe untied and wears prescription eyeglasses (as opposed to the cool shades of his brother's). Joan Allen ("The Crucible" and this fall's "The Ice Storm") diligently plays Archer's wife Eve, in what could've easily turned into a thankless role. But Allen is such a good actress that she pulls us into a few rare emotions not normally felt in die-hard action pictures. But then again, this is a John Woo film, his best since coming to America and his most ambitious since his Hong Kong classics "The Killer" and "Hard Boiled". Woo's best scene comes in a left where Troy's former flame Sasha Hasser (Gina Gershon), along with her son and Troy's other henchmen, have set up refuge. Highly reminiscent of his earlier works, Woo's bloody choreography of violence here hits a high step when the Judy Garland song "Over the Rainbow" starts to play amid the bullets and bodies. Woo replaced the original on early prints with a redone version of Olivia-Newton-John in order to avoid unnecessary copyright squabbles. Still, it is a first for the action genre and unlike anything this year, and with an exhilarating boat chase, "Face/Off" easily outscores the lame "Speed 2: Cruise Control". In America, it is wise not to mess with a master of action. Compared in the past to the late Sam Peckinpah, Woo has delivered the goods, giving us over two hours of fiery entertainment. For the first time in America, Woo has found his Hong Kong calling.

1/2 (out of four) A-

Sam Peckinpah, Woo has delivered the goods, giving us over two hours of fiery entertainment. For the first time in America, Woo has found his Hong Kong calling.

High, low notes rock coal mine

By DEAN G. LEWIS

Constant socio-political pounding almost breaks up the brass band in writer-director Mark Herman's "Brassed Off," a well-intentioned yet unwieldy rock musical set around an coal mine strike in Yorkshire. When the fictional Grimley Colliery shuts off its lights on home turf, the local troupe of musicians, most of whom are miners themselves, defiantly challenge the government in hopes of avoiding a closure that could prove to be economically disastrous. The players, headed by Pete Postlethwaite (Oscar nominee for "In the Name of the Father"), ultimately find salvation through their music, following the bigwig likes of Margaret Thatcher. Postlethwaite brings together an above-average cast to help him blow some eardrums. Fellow bandmates Ewan McGregor (currently in "The Pillow Book") and Tara Fitzgerald surprisingly have little to do in a script that is smart enough not to emphasize their underwritten roles. Herman does extract a subtle romantic subplot for the two by sticking them side by side in an unseen sexual all-nighter. Appropriately short, their romance bliss allows time for the film's more deserving moments of conviction, especially between the ailing Postlethwaite (his lungs have become chimneys of soot and coal dust) and son Philip, excellently played by Stephen Thompkinson. Stuck with a broken trombone, Phil has mismanaged his wife and kids for almost ten years. Having served time in the slammer, Phil's now got a pair of loan sharks on his tail and a clown gig to endure for extra money. Herman tackles the usual father-son relationship with flair. Phil tries suicide; old pop ends up bedridden, yet both men find a bond in the end after venturing, along with their proud band, into London's Albert Hall for a final, "pour-out-hearts-out" performance. Herman's beautifully-staged horn session, in turn, closes the film. A nice send-off for a sometimes preachy, schematic fusion of working-class Brits and harmonious instrumentalists.

1/2 (out of four) B-

Sam Peckinpah, Woo has delivered the goods, giving us over two hours of fiery entertainment. For the first time in America, Woo has found his Hong Kong calling.

---

ON THE SCREEN

face-lift when he has Troy's kisser carved out (putting laser technology to good use) and transplanted onto his own. Trouble is, Troy steals Archer's stowed-away gun and sets out to command Archer's former disco partner to help him blow some up. A wannabe bad man, Pollux walks with one shoe untied and wears prescription eyeglasses (as opposed to the cool shades of his brother's). Joan Allen ("The Crucible" and this fall's "The Ice Storm") diligently plays Archer's wife Eve, in what could've easily turned into a thankless role. But Allen is such a good actress that she pulls us into a few rare emotions not normally felt in die-hard action pictures. But then again, this is a John Woo film, his best since coming to America and his most ambitious since his Hong Kong classics "The Killer" and "Hard Boiled". Woo's best scene comes in a left where Troy's former flame Sasha Hasser (Gina Gershon), along with her son and Troy's other henchmen, have set up refuge. Highly reminiscent of his earlier works, Woo's bloody choreography of violence here hits a high step when the Judy Garland song "Over the Rainbow" starts to play amid the bullets and bodies. Woo replaced the original on early prints with a redone version of Olivia-Newton-John in order to avoid unnecessary copyright squabbles. Still, it is a first for the action genre and unlike anything this year, and with an exhilarating boat chase, "Face/Off" easily outscores the lame "Speed 2: Cruise Control". In America, it is wise not to mess with a master of action. Compared in the past to the late Sam Peckinpah, Woo has delivered the goods, giving us over two hours of fiery entertainment. For the first time in America, Woo has found his Hong Kong calling.

1/2 (out of four) A-

Sam Peckinpah, Woo has delivered the goods, giving us over two hours of fiery entertainment. For the first time in America, Woo has found his Hong Kong calling.

---

High, low notes rock coal mine

By DEAN G. LEWIS

Constant socio-political pounding almost breaks up the brass band in writer-director Mark Herman's "Brassed Off," a well-intentioned yet unwieldy rock musical set around a coal mine strike in Yorkshire. When the fictional Grimley Colliery shuts off its lights on home turf, the local troupe of musicians, most of whom are miners themselves, defiantly challenge the government in hopes of avoiding a closure that could prove to be economically disastrous. The players, headed by Pete Postlethwaite (Oscar nominee for "In the Name of the Father"), ultimately find salvation through their music, following the bigwig likes of Margaret Thatcher. Postlethwaite brings together an above-average cast to help him blow some eardrums. Fellow bandmates Ewan McGregor (currently in "The Pillow Book") and Tara Fitzgerald surprisingly have little to do in a script that is smart enough not to emphasize their underwritten roles. Herman does extract a subtle romantic subplot for the two by sticking them side by side in an unseen sexual all-nighter. Appropriately short, their romance bliss allows time for the film's more deserving moments of conviction, especially between the ailing Postlethwaite (his lungs have become chimneys of soot and coal dust) and son Philip, excellently played by Stephen Thompkinson. Stuck with a broken trombone, Phil has mismanaged his wife and kids for almost ten years. Having served time in the slammer, Phil's now got a pair of loan sharks on his tail and a clown gig to endure for extra money. Herman tackles the usual father-son relationship with flair. Phil tries suicide; old pop ends up bedridden, yet both men find a bond in the end after venturing, along with their proud band, into London's Albert Hall for a final, "pour-out-hearts-out" performance. Herman's beautifully-staged horn session, in turn, closes the film. A nice send-off for a sometimes preachy, schematic fusion of working-class Brits and harmonious instrumentalists.

1/2 (out of four) B-

Sam Peckinpah, Woo has delivered the goods, giving us over two hours of fiery entertainment. For the first time in America, Woo has found his Hong Kong calling.
Energetic comedy gets a considerable boost from British actor Rupert Everett ("The Madness of King George"), who plays Julia Roberts's trusty, gay friend. Abandoning the stereotypes seen before in that kind of character, Everett lets his quirky, sentimental way. Scripted by Ron Bass (co-writer on "When a Man Loves a Woman", "Joy Luck Club"), the film, most notably in the opening credit sequence in which an all-female act flamboyantly performs in bright colors and wedding day attire. Another rousing moment comes at a dinner party in which Roberts and company sing a rendition of the old Burt Bacharach-Dionne Warwick collaboration, "Say a Little Prayer", Not bad for the veteran music maestro (also prominently featured in Mike Myers' "Austin Powers") boyantly performs in "Best Friend's Wedding".

Some of the schemes devised by Roberts are borderline insane. Food critic or not, her character basically lacks the believability of such a part even though she's at her most appealing since 1990's "Pretty Woman". Music dominates the film, most notably in the Burt Bacharach-Dionne Warwick collaboration, "Say a Little Prayer". Not bad for the veteran music maestro (also prominently featured in Mike Myers' "Austin Powers") who's proves there's still ways out of extinction.

The plot isn't really there in "My Best Friend's Wedding", yet the picture works in its own quirky, sentimental way. Scripted by Ron Bass (co-writer on "When a Man Loves a Woman", "Joy Luck Club"), the film features Roberts as a food critic whose single life is loose in what turns into an amiable farce from Australian director P.J. Hogan ("Muriel's Wedding"). The picture works in its own quirky, sentimental way. Scripted by Ron Bass (co-writer on "When a Man Loves a Woman", "Joy Luck Club"), the film features Roberts as a food critic whose single life is loose in what turns into an amiable farce from Australian director P.J. Hogan ("Muriel's Wedding").

One of the schemes devised by Roberts is a borderline insane. Food critic or not, her character basically lacks the believability of such a part even though she's at her most appealing since 1990's "Pretty Woman". Music dominates the film, most notably in the opening credit sequence in which an all-female act flamboyantly performs in bright colors and wedding day attire. Another rousing moment comes at a dinner party in which Roberts and company sing a rendition of the old Burt Bacharach-Dionne Warwick collaboration, "Say a Little Prayer". Not bad for the veteran music maestro (also prominently featured in Mike Myers' "Austin Powers") who's proves there's still ways out of extinction.

Energetic comedy gets a considerable boost from British actor Rupert Everett ("The Madness of King George"), who plays Julia Roberts's trusty, gay friend. Abandoning the stereotypes seen before in that kind of character, Everett lets his quirky, sentimental way. Scripted by Ron Bass (co-writer on "When a Man Loves a Woman", "Joy Luck Club"), the film, most notably in the opening credit sequence in which an all-female act flamboyantly performs in bright colors and wedding day attire. Another rousing moment comes at a dinner party in which Roberts and company sing a rendition of the old Burt Bacharach-Dionne Warwick collaboration, "Say a Little Prayer". Not bad for the veteran music maestro (also prominently featured in Mike Myers' "Austin Powers") who's proves there's still ways out of extinction.

The plot isn't really there in "My Best Friend's Wedding", yet the picture works in its own quirky, sentimental way. Scripted by Ron Bass (co-writer on "When a Man Loves a Woman", "Joy Luck Club"), the film features Roberts as a food critic whose single life is loose in what turns into an amiable farce from Australian director P.J. Hogan ("Muriel's Wedding"). The picture works in its own quirky, sentimental way. Scripted by Ron Bass (co-writer on "When a Man Loves a Woman", "Joy Luck Club"), the film features Roberts as a food critic whose single life is loose in what turns into an amiable farce from Australian director P.J. Hogan ("Muriel's Wedding").

One of the schemes devised by Roberts is a borderline insane. Food critic or not, her character basically lacks the believability of such a part even though she's at her most appealing since 1990's "Pretty Woman". Music dominates the film, most notably in the opening credit sequence in which an all-female act flamboyantly performs in bright colors and wedding day attire. Another rousing moment comes at a dinner party in which Roberts and company sing a rendition of the old Burt Bacharach-Dionne Warwick collaboration, "Say a Little Prayer". Not bad for the veteran music maestro (also prominently featured in Mike Myers' "Austin Powers") who's proves there's still ways out of extinction.

The plot isn't really there in "My Best Friend's Wedding", yet the picture works in its own quirky, sentimental way. Scripted by Ron Bass (co-writer on "When a Man Loves a Woman", "Joy Luck Club"), the film features Roberts as a food critic whose single life is loose in what turns into an amiable farce from Australian director P.J. Hogan ("Muriel's Wedding"). The picture works in its own quirky, sentimental way. Scripted by Ron Bass (co-writer on "When a Man Loves a Woman", "Joy Luck Club"), the film features Roberts as a food critic whose single life is loose in what turns into an amiable farce from Australian director P.J. Hogan ("Muriel's Wedding").

One of the schemes devised by Roberts is a borderline insane. Food critic or not, her character basically lacks the believability of such a part even though she's at her most appealing since 1990's "Pretty Woman". Music dominates the film, most notably in the opening credit sequence in which an all-female act flamboyantly performs in bright colors and wedding day attire. Another rousing moment comes at a dinner party in which Roberts and company sing a rendition of the old Burt Bacharach-Dionne Warwick collaboration, "Say a Little Prayer". Not bad for the veteran music maestro (also prominently featured in Mike Myers' "Austin Powers") who's proves there's still ways out of extinction.
LEAD STORIES

- In April, the town council of Cambre in northern Spain voted in legal, marriage-like status to nontraditional unions, but the controversy was not over a same-sex couple. The precipitating event was outrage almost everywhere else in Spain.
- In northern Spain, a marriage vote in legal, marriage-like status to nontraditional unions was passed.
- In Mexico, a man and woman have lived together for 18 years and have kids aged 5 and 11. The council's decision provoked outrage almost everywhere else in Spain.
- In April 3, less than 24 hours before he was due to be executed for beating three people to death with a bowling pin in 1991, Phillip Wilkinson was taken off North Carolina's death row and sent for mental evaluation because guards found two suicide notes in his cell. (Actually, prison officials believe that a person scheduled to die the next day but who was found dead in his cell the night before might be insane and therefore cannot be executed. And on April 1 in Texas, convicted murderer David Lee Herman scheduled to die the next day but who wanted to kill himself the night before was convicted murderer David Lee Herman scheduled to die the next day but who wanted to kill himself the night before was found not guilty of the charges against him.) And on April 1 in Texas, convicted murderer David Lee Herman scheduled to die the next day but who wanted to kill himself the night before was found not guilty of the charges against him.

THE LITIGIOUS SOCIETY

- Valerie Nicolescu filed a lawsuit against the Los Angeles Police Department in April for letting her son (one of the two heavily armed, armor-suited men in that Feb. 28 bank robbery and shootout) bleed to death by not giving him medical care soon enough after he was shot by officers. (Nicolescu is also in court these days because police, in a separate matter, forced a mentally retarded woman in her care to be locked in a room in Nicolescu's basement along with several toilet buckets.)
- Chris Stein filed a $555,000 lawsuit against the town of Ipswich, S.D., in February after he fell on a sidewalk that was too rough. He claims the town failed to maintain the sidewalk in good condition, which is not an unusual claim except that Stein is the mayor of Ipswich.
- Carolyn Strauss filed a $1 million law suit against the New York Lottery in March because she was offended by its Lotto subway advertisements. Strauss is 5 feet 7 inches and weighs 200 pounds and felt personally insulted by the ad that suggested the lottery was a less onerous way to make money than marrying "the client's big-boned daughter."
- A 1994 lawsuit, filed by Judge Philip Espinosa, 44, of the Arizona Court of Appeals against singer Barry Manilow, will finally go to trial in September. Espinosa said he still has a painful ringing in his ears from a Manilow concert in Tucson. He admitted his wife was upset at the time.

GREAT TIME TO BE SILVER

- A 20-year-old man and three teenagers broke into the Moses Lake, Wash., home of Dorothy Cunningham, 75, and Ms. Marty Killinger, 61, in February, allegedly to rob them. However, both women happened to be armed and drove the guys away with warning shots. The four were arrested a short distance from the home.
- The Associated Press reported in March that Mario Dulceno, 81, of New Orleans believes he can continue his avocation of playing the piano even after he fell on a sidewalk: that "Time and circumstances have weakened my legs, but I can still play the piano."

NO LONGER WEIRD

- Adding to the list of stories that were formerly weird but which now occur with such frequency that they must be retired from circulation: (17) The burglar who sneaks into a home or building intending to loot the place but who falls asleep before he can get to work, as allegedly did Brian Hodgson, 28, who was arrested in September after the ceiling at a Pomo Beach, Fla., McDonald's gave way, disturbing his sleep. And (18) the family that leaves behind one or more members at a highway rest stop and fails to realize they are short-handed until way down the road, as happened in April to a 9-year-old boy whose father left him in Lloydminster, Manitoba, and did not miss him until he got home to Red Deer, Alberta, nearly 200 miles away.

Nursing program adds on-the-job training to curriculum

From PAGE 1

The Orlando Sentinel presents the University of Central Florida a $50,000 check for a state-of-the-art digital darkroom in the new Anthony J. Nicholson School of Communication. President John Hitt (right) received the check.
Senior-laden 1997 awaits UCF volleyball recognized foreign aid services of the student's home country are not counted against those five years. Because of this by-law, Menchikova's one year of military service in Russia will not cost her a third year of eligibility at UCF.

From PAGE 12

Coach Laura Smith feels Menchikova's return to the senior-laden team will only increase UCF's chances of making it farther into the post-season.

"With Renata getting to come back this year, it most certainly will help the team," said Smith, whose Knight squads have yet to lose to a TAAC opponent in her five seasons at the helm.

"It's like the icing on the cake for us and could not have happened to a better person."

Off the court, Menchikova has been a Dean's List student and a two-year TAAC All-Academic honoree. She also has a 3.4 gpa in a double major in Management Information Services and Computer Sciences.

On the court, Metzcus said their team leader is all business.

"Even though she is one of the best hitters in the country, she is not arrogant in the sense she would boss her teammates around, but she leads by example." Metzcus said.

After all the effort spent on building towards a third and final season, Menchikova is just happy to play again.

"When you first start, you have to learn how to play the college game and learn your coach's system," she said. "It would have been unfair now that we are seniors, not to utilize everyone's experience and have a great season."

Menchikova said she will enjoy returning to UCF for learning, as well as athletics.

"It's a good school for business and computer science and I like the area," she said.

"I don't mind staying for awhile longer."

Women get revenge from rival FSU

From PAGE 12

come out and keep trying to do better," said Koheler. "After the first one [the loss to the Pelicans] we looked pretty decent, but we really didn't have our act together. The third game [the win over Orlando] we looked really sharp and we polished a couple of things up and got a little bit better as the day went on."

"In the fourth game we kept all the starters in, and it's only 14 minutes so, it was easy to win."

Koheler said that the heat definitely played a factor in the earlier losses, but as the day wore on and the wins began, it was less of a factor.

"It was a factor in the first couple games, but we sort of just [tried] to get more used to the heat," Koheler said. "We got a little more hydrated up for the third and fourth games, but I've lived in Florida my whole life and I'm still not used to it."

The tournament was probably UCF's last chance to qualify for the Southeastern Regional Tournament. The club will continue to participate throughout the summer in various tournaments including one in Naples, Fl. in late July and the Cape Fear tournament held in late August.

UCF club officials commented that tournament competitors were shocked at how well the tournament was organized. The tournament, from the painted lines on the playing field to the concession stand providing food and refreshments, is run entirely by the UCF men and women's rugby clubs. Club officials went on to state that with the poor quality of other tournaments in the south, the Todd Miller Sevens tournament is widely regarded as the premier Sevens tournament.

The tournament, which included college clubs from USF, FSU, UF, and other club teams such as the Miami Rugby Club, the Jacksonville Rugby Club, and the Palm Beach Rugby Club, is expected to have at least equaled the $2000 mark from last year's tournament although no official dollar amount was released. All proceeds from the tournament go to its namesake, Todd Miller, a former UCF rugby club member who incurred a paralyzing injury while participating with the club.

Men to play out string after poor tournament end of the trizone as the pursuing defender collapsed behind her. Her try as time expired gave UCF a 10-7 victory.

From PAGE 12

Cope, the co-founder of UCF's women's rugby club, said that defeating FSU was a goal for the team as soon as they knew they would be facing the Lady Seminoles.

"It [beating FSU] was very important to us. They're the ones who won the tournament last year, so all we wanted to do was beat them," Cope said. "It was even sweeter [to beat them] and watch the girl [who was pursuing me] fall."

UCF finished the tournament at 3-4, with the other two wins coming in a 10-0 and 29-0 defeat of FAU. This tournament was the club's first test of the season, and Cope said the club performed as well as could be expected.

"We played together as a team, everybody was where they needed to be, and everything clicked," Cope said.

But the title did not come with-out some adversity. UCF Seven's rookie Tara Thompson sustained a knee injury during the FSU game. The extent of Thompson's injury was unknown, but may have suffered an torn Anterior Cruciate Ligament.

The club will travel to Naples with the men's rugby club in late July to participate in the Naples Rugby Tournament and may also attend the Tallahassee Invitational Tournament on August 16.
Women’s rugby club wins tournament, more respect

By JEFF CASE
Staff Writer

As the new kids on the block in the women’s rugby circuit in Florida, UCF has found whatever respect they may have earned around the state has been hard-fought. Case in point: the rivalry between UCF and FSU.

Over a year ago, UCF’s women’s rugby club traveled to Tallahassee to participate in a tournament held on the FSU campus against the FSU women. When UCF arrived, they found that the hosts were not present and did not show up until several hours later.

UCF, having paid the tournament fees and sat through a grueling bus ride to Tallahassee, felt disrespected and spurned by their competitors. As the team entered the Todd Miller Seven’s Tournament last weekend, the club saw the June 21 tournament as a golden opportunity to payback their in-state rivals.

The club converted on this opportunity by defeating FSU, the defending champions of women’s competition at Todd Miller. With FSU leading 7-5 late in the second half, UCF needed to make a move for the FSU trione (goal) soon. UCF got their chance late in the period when UCF’s Kerri Cope picked up a loose ball and began running towards the trione. With an FSU defender on her heels, Cope put forth an extra burst of speed and touched the ball in the end zone.

The club converted the opportunity by defeating FSU, the defending champions of women’s competition at Todd Miller, in dramatic fashion.

With FSU leading 7-5 late in the second half, UCF needed to make a move for the FSU trione (goal) soon. UCF got their chance late in the period when UCF’s Kerri Cope picked up a loose ball and began running towards the trione. With an FSU defender on her heels, Cope put forth an extra burst of speed and touched the ball in the end zone.

Evading a tackle from a member of the Pelican Rugby Club, UCF’s Eric Czachowski looks for an open teammate.

Women’s rugby club wins tournament, more respect

By JEFF CASE
Staff Writer

In Florida, the heat can make even the clearest situation hazy. Just ask the men’s rugby club.

Entering the sixth annual Todd Miller Seven’s tournament on June 21, the club had two goals: To not only make the finals in the Qualifier round of the tournament, but to win the round and earn a berth for their full rugby squad in the Southeastern Regional Tournament held in fall of 1997. But with temperatures exceeding 90 degrees for most of the day combined with a tough early tournament schedule, the haze of insecurity set in. With two straight losses in Qualifying round play, the club found themselves and their plans in shambles.

But despite the early setbacks, the club still managed to walk away with their heads held high by winning the third place bracket and the title of Best of the Rest.

By defeating the Orlando Rugby Club’s second team 15-0 and then rolling over the Pelicanos Rugby Club 29-5, UCF was able to leave the tournament with a 2-2 record while also upping their overall season record to 3-5.

UCF’s losses, a 14-0 defeat at the hands of the Pelicanos Rugby Club, and a 19-5 loss to the Naples Rugby Club, played a role in the team’s motivation to finish strong, said Jon Kohler.

“After the first two [losses], we wanted to...”

See MEN, Page 11

Volleyball captain ruled eligible for senior season

By DEREK CONSOLIN
Sports Editor

Title IX must be treating male and female athletes the same. The NCAA almost declared ineligible the team leader from UCF’s most celebrated women’s sport.

Renata Menchikova, the reigning TAAC volleyball player of the year and Golden Knight team captain, will have another year of eligibility after UCF petitioned the NCAA on the basis of Menchikova’s Russian military service.

“If feels great to be back,” Menchikova said.

For the coaching staff, it feels much better.

“With seven seniors on the team, a genuine, talented year is coming for us,” assistant coach Miriam Metzgu said.

“The players are really tight after their past the first round of the NCAAs. After coming up with my teammates, I wanted to be around when it happened.”

Menchikova, who started her schooling in Russia in 1992, served in the Russian Army in 1994 and enrolled at UCF in 1995. The NCAA By-Law 14.2.1 states a student-athlete must complete their eligibility within five years of enrolling at a collegiate institution.

However, time spent in the armed services, on official church missions or with religious, on official church missions or with

Menchikova

See SENIOR, Page 11