Best Buddies provides opportunities for students

"It's helped me to love, how to show compassion and how to share good times with a person much different than myself," said Diana Bjorkman, College Buddy Director of the UCF chapter of Best Buddies.

Best Buddies, a program that was founded in 1989 at Georgetown University by Anthony Kennedy Shriver, is dedicated to enhancing the lives of people with mental retardation by providing opportunities for one-to-one friendships and employment.

Currently, on over five hundred college and high school campuses around the U.S., as well as Egypt, Canada, and Greece, the Best Buddies program pairs a student and a person with mental retardation together. The two buddies then commit to contacting each other via phone, Internet, or mail at least once a week, and getting together at least twice a month during one academic year. Together, the buddies may participate in a myriad of activities including, going to the mall, the movies, or out to a restaurant.

Bjorkman, feels that students who participate in the program will benefit more than expected.

"It's difficult for me to describe the fun that I have had with my buddy, Chris, during the time that I have known him," said Bjorkman.

The Best Buddies program had eight buddy matches last year, and Bjorkman expects that number to rise to 15 - 17 this year. "Best Buddies International will keep growing and setting up friendships until every person with mental retardation in the world has a buddy," she said.

A Sept. 19 meeting was held in the Student Union room 220 for those who wanted to join the program. Students who did not attend this meeting may attend any one of the other monthly meetings. For students who want to be a part of the program, but cannot make the time commitment, Best Buddies accepts applications for associate members at any time of the school year. Students can become involved with the Best Buddies International program by logging onto their website at: www.bestbuddies.org. They may also contact the UCF chapter of Best Buddies through e-mail at UCFBestbuddies@yahoo.com.

UCF student publishes book

"50 percent urban surrealism plus 25 percent travelling plus 25 percent bizarre love triangle," is how Juan Martinez, a Creative Writing major at UCF, describes his recently published book, Stroke.

What's the book about? Henry Downes and Philip Long have fallen for the same woman, though Henry has forgotten Philip has not quite found her. Lacy, the subject of their affection (and sporadic psychic vampire), has been unaided by Henry's desire: she has a hard time remembering who or where she is. Time breaks down. Some choice scenes ensue.

One of the most interesting features of this book and phenomenal literary gems is a 10-page "sentimental" site: http://www.mcsweeneys.net.

Martinez Plus he was working for an English-language newspaper in Bogotá, Colombia so he says that he warmed up writing articles for them and then had the afternoons free to do what he wanted. He has also done freelance work for the Sentinel and the Future.

Currently, Juan has some short stories published at the online version of McSweeney’s. They can be found at http://www.mcsweeneys.net. More information about Juan Martinez can be found at his web-site: http://www.fulmerford.com/st/index.php.html.

SG passes bill for etiquette dinner

Adam Shriver

Staff Writer

UCF Senators approved a request for $4,500 by Consultants for Effective Leadership (CEL) on Sept. 14 for an etiquette dinner. The money approved was in addition to $8,000 already budgeted to CEL as an endowment for the fiscal year.

The etiquette dinner is an annual event that has been held for the last eight years. The dinner costs $11,781 to hold.

In the past, CEL charged students anywhere from $20 - $25 per student. After CEL approached Student Government for additional money, CEL looked into the matter further. Student Government realized that CEL could not charge admittance to the event if funds provided by SG in its original budget were to be used. If the event were being put on with this money, it would have to be free to all students.

In order for CEL to be able to afford the dinner without charging students, they went before Senate and asked for money in addition to their primary budget. They were initially given $8,000 in their budget. When they appeared before senate on Sept. 7 they asked for an additional $6,000. This was thought by Senate to be too much. They came to a compromise of $4,000, but the issue was tabled for the evening and put off until Sept. 14.

On Sept. 14, the issue was once again brought up and discussed. Debate over the etiquette dinner went on for over an hour. CEL was once again present to plead their case.

The Senate ruled the same evening to provide

Students show ignorance about credit

JENNIFER PATerson
staff writer

"If you think education is expensive, try ignorance." — Derek Bok

Many students come to college with high ambitions for a better job, and want to move up in the world, but inevitably, college serves as a valuable tool to broaden one’s horizons in more ways than can be quantified. Ironically though, it is at school that ignorance is costing many college students thousands of dollars a year.

Last Wednesday the UCF Alumni Association and MBNA American teamed up for a student seminar on financial success. Dean Bird, a representative of MBNA gave the seminar to help students understand the obligation and responsibility they undertake when signing for a credit card — more specifically how to deal with credit and how to avoid major pitfalls.

Many college students don’t fully understand what good credit means or how bad credit can ultimately affect their life in the future. “People think it’s easier than they think to fix bad credit,” said Ryan Nole. “I stopped paying my credit card years ago. When I get a job I will worry about it.”

While Bird contends that it is not impossible to recover from a bad credit history, it is not desirable and takes much effort. So why is credit so important?

"Credit is the financial sector’s way of judging character," Bird said. "How you have handled your credit in the past determines a lot of things like the rate at which a lending company will lend you money.

Banks, mortgage companies, landlords and employers are all institutions or people who care about your credit rating. If you are delinquent on loans or have been past due on payments in the past, banks and lending companies are not likely to loan you money or they may make you pay with a higher interest rate.

For example, an $18,000 dollar car financed for 60 months will cost someone with good credit $373.65 at an interest rate of nine percent. A person with poor credit will have to pay $457.08 dollars a month — that’s 17.1 percent.

“That’s a full $5,000 dollars more when the car is paid off,” said Bird. “I’ve seen car loans up to 24 percent. Obviously you do not want to have bad credit.”

If you have bad credit, landlords will often make you pay two, three, four months in advance and a much larger down payment than Mr. X who has been faithful to his credit obligations.

"Employers often look at credit rating too," said Bird. "Studies show that people who have bad credit are more likely to commit fraud and steal money.”

He said that they should always tell you before they check your credit, but many companies do it and it will affect your hiring ability in the future.

When trying to secure a loan or open up a low interest credit card, there are many variables that factor into the decision. Some are found on your credit report and others are obtained from the application. So what makes a person a good candidate and what makes them bad?

Creditors take in a number of factors when deciding if a person is eligible. These include ability (sufficient income considering debt), stability (residency history, time on the job, school reputation) and willingness to pay and past credit history (i.e., how well you have kept up with payments and paid off debts).

When creditors are deciding whether to issue you a loan or line of credit, they often look at the credit report. What is on it?

Information on the credit report includes:

* Whose credit cards you carry
* What department stores you shop at
* Your personal loans
* Who has inquired about your credit and how often?
* Any mistakes you’ve made

Bird says that multiple inquiries on your credit report can be alarming. If they see that you have been turned down multiple times they will wonder why. They will also take into consideration how large your line of credit is. For instance, if you have signed up for those credit cards on campus only to receive the free gift, but never closed it, it will show up as an open line of credit. Too many of these, he says, and it will affect your lending ability. It is a good idea to close out these accounts that you never intended to use.

So what if you haven’t missed any payments yet or been delinquent on your loans? How do you know if you are on the path to bad credit? Some warning signs are you are unable to make minimum payments, you borrow from one card to pay for another (you actually end up paying more sometimes because the interest begins immediately), you are "maxing out" cards (another bad reflection on your credit rating), you pay late and you exceed the limits.

These are the first steps to major pitfalls in credit and could lead to disastrous mistakes. Mistakes that leave you hanging are tax liens (owing back taxes), judgment (as in a civil case), foreclosures (home taken away), repossession and bankruptcies. While most mistakes stay on your credit rating for four years, these show up for much longer.

"The first four stay on your credit report for seven years and bankruptcy stays on the report for 10 as opposed to four years for most other violations," said Bird. "But he did stress, "Although it is difficult to repair bad credit, it is not impossible if someone becomes responsible.""

Bird recommends that everyone should order a credit report at least once a year to make sure that there are not any fraudulent uses of your credit. Also he says that you should save all your documentation so you can send it to the credit bureau to fix any errors on your report if needed. "Generally it takes four weeks to get the information and four weeks to fix," said Bird.

Bird urged college students to set proper goals, to make spending in line with goals and most importantly, make saving part of your expenses. Bird said, "It’s not what you make, but how you spend it."
Test taking jitters: steps for student success

Test anxiety is sweeping over college campuses throughout the nation as college students prepare for the first tests of the semester. Late nights, early mornings and many cups of coffee later, students feel they have fully prepared themselves for their tests until they walk into the class and their minds go blank.

This is a very common occurrence, but there are different test survival skills that can be applied to studying for a test. There are seven techniques to get over test anxiety or avoid it altogether. One of the first keys to remember is to put the test in perspective.

Remember that there is always another test. Very rarely are classes based on a single test. Focus on one test at a time and concentrate. Believing every test is life or death can completely destroy a student's confidence before an exam. By knowing the material, the mind feels more at ease. Confidence helps students keep from questioning themselves.

"I worry about my GPA dropping because of the tests I take," said UCF student Mark Dalhausser. "Then I can't concentrate on the information that I have to study." Try to study for the test itself, not the grade. If focus is placed upon attention to the information and studying instead of the potential outcome, your mind will be able to think more clearly because it is not overwhelmed with excess stress.

"Even after I have studied the information forward and backward I tend to doubt myself," said UCF student Danielle Marino.

Avoid negative thinking. Many students tend to question themselves even after they have studied. If all available material has been studied, students should be able to handle the test. Thinking negatively increases anxiety, and plagues your mind with excess thoughts.

Preparation is another element in reducing test anxiety. The more preparation that is done decreases anxiety while the lack of preparation increases nervousness.

"The more information I know, the more likely it is that I should be able to remember it for the test," said Dalhausser.

"When I don't study, I tend to be more nervous because I'm not sure of the information." Preparation can also boost one's self-confidence before an exam. By knowing the material, the mind feels more at ease. Confidence helps students keep from questioning themselves.

"After I have studied for a test, I feel better about my knowledge. I know I studied it and therefore I feel ready for the test," said Marino.

Students should avoid cramming. Many students believe that they can "cram" all of the information for a test into one night of studying. This style of studying is not only detrimental, but also a waste of time. The learning process cannot be completed the night before. In many cases memorization of the information takes place, but nothing has been learned. After the test is over, all of the information will be forgotten, thereby creating even more stress when it comes time for the final.

Make sure to review any and all information given out by the professor. Studying from more than one source can reiterate the information and make it easier to understand. Read through your notes, book and go over any other materials that were used in class such as pictures, slides, maps, or charts.

Finally, on the day of the test avoid "stressful situations" such as arriving late or being near people with high anxiety. Try to arrive early to class to avoid the stress caused when in a rush.

Relationships 101

You've seen them - they're everywhere. Couples walking hand in hand, staring into each other's eyes while coming at each other. How do they do it? Is there some secret guide to a great, healthy relationship? Whether you're attached at the hip, or free as a lark you may already know some of the basic guidelines, but do you really know what it takes?

The general rules really aren't that tough to master, some students say. Mutual respect, communication, honesty and of course patience are some key components to keep in mind, according to UCF students. Actually there aren't any official rules. Students claim to mostly make them up as they go along and hope things work out.

UCF student Kristy Sciarrotta, admitted she doesn't always know the answers. She asked, "What about trust? Do you start with 100 percent trust at the beginning, or have to build up to that as the relationship progresses?" Mike McKee answered her saying, "Oh, definitely, you have to build up to that level of trust." One thing is for sure though, any relationship, especially a romantic one, is hard work to maintain.

With UCF having 55 percent female and 45 percent male students, it may seem that guys have the advantage. Student James Howard said, "Well, I just got out of a two year relationship, so my opinion right now might be a little bitter." He also added: "But seriously, trust has got to be the most important. It's also important to keep things new; seeing the same person every-day - you've got to keep it spicy."

Keeping things spicy and the romance alive is sometimes challenging, especially in a long-term relationship, said Howard. Sciarrotta also said, "The most important thing is to realize that you can never change a person. If somebody can't accept you for who you are, and vice versa - then don't even try to make something work."

As long as both partners keep the channels of communication open, are honest and have a mutual respect for each other they are taking the right steps toward a healthy relationship.

On Sept. 18 Dr. Robert Harmon from the UCF Testing and Counseling Center spoke in the Student Union on tips for maintaining healthy relationships. This was the first in a series of 10 programs, free for students, put on by the center every Monday from 7:30-9:30 p.m.

Harmon said, "It's a new venture for us, and we're trying to do something proactive by speaking on issues that students come to us about." Harmon stressed the importance of communication skills. He said: "Many people begin relationships without the first idea of how to relate to another person. You have to master that first."

Film festival for those with short attention spans

CHRISTIE ZIEO
STAFF WRITER

The Short Attention Span Film and Video Festival tour will stop by UCF Nov. 7, at 9 p.m. The festival spotlights about 70 films, all one to two minutes in length, and includes everything from live action to animation. It consists of two parts: the video viewing, to be shown in the Cape Florida ballroom at the Student Union, and an educational portion scheduled for the night before and sponsored by the UCF Film Department. The educational portion will highlight interviews with the directors of the films being shown.

The Campus Activities Board Cinema committee, will most likely be adding some other activities to the festival, but have not scheduled anything as of yet.

CAB Cinema hopes to bring other festivals and film events to campus, besides the Network Event Theatre advanced screenings they host throughout the year.

"I want to bring more festival and student-type material to the campus for those who are interested in both being entertained and the process of making films," said CAB Cinema director John Dillon.

CAB will show 'American Pie' Sept. 20, and 'South Park' Sept. 27, both at 9 p.m. in the Cape Florida ballroom. Their first NET advanced screening will be 'The Ladies Man,' the date is forthcoming.
Ovarian cancer, the silent killer

TAYLOR CLARK
STAFF WRITER

This year over 25,500 women of all ages will be diagnosed with ovarian cancer and over 14,500 will die. Early detection makes a woman's chance of survival four times greater. Being informed can save the life of a mother, grandmother or girlfriend.

Ovarian cancer is the deadliest of all the female reproductive system cancers because it seldom causes symptoms that women notice or recognize. Often the symptoms are misdiagnosed as intestinal illnesses or menopausal ailments. As a result, almost 70 percent of women are not diagnosed with ovarian cancer until it is in advanced stages.

For this reason recognizing risk factors, forms of prevention and symptoms are essential in fighting this disease. In most cases, women between the ages of 50 and 75 are the ones affected, but this does not mean young women should not worry. Most young women are uninformed and therefore feel they are and will be the exception to the rule.

Jen Schneider, a student at Valencia Community College says, "I don't know anyone who has had cancer or died from it...I don't worry about it. I am just one of those naive people that thinks it won't happen to them."

Knowing the risk factors can serve as a preventative tool for young women. They include:

- Family history of the disease
- Early menstruation
- Exposure to talc (frequently used douches, condoms, dusting powder containing talc used in the genital area)
- Obesity
- History of infertility
- Never having children
- History of breast, endometrial or colorectal cancer
- Late menopause

In addition to being informed about risk factors, oral contraceptives are an effective form of prevention. According to the National Ovarian Cancer Association, if taken for more than five years, birth control pills can reduce the risk of ovarian cancer by 50 percent. Taken more than 10 years, the rate of occurrence drops another 25 percent.

A low calorie and/or low fat diet, breast feeding, pregnancy, tubal ligation and hysterectomy all reduce the risk of ovarian cancer as well.

Once cancer has begun to develop in the ovaries, early detection is imperative for survival. If detected in the beginning stages, the survival rate increases from 15 percent to 80 percent. Early detection is not common. According to the National Ovarian Cancer Coalition, "almost 70 percent of women with ovarian cancer are not diagnosed until the disease is advanced in stage. The five-year survival rate for these women is only 20 percent." In an annual rectovaginal exam, transvaginal sonography and a blood test can help detect the disease, but there is no diagnostic test.

While early detection improves successful treatment of the disease, early cancer of the ovaries rarely cause symptoms that women notice or recognize. Symptoms include:

- Chronic intestinal complaints such as gas, nausea and indigestion
- Frequent urination
- Pain during intercourse
- Weight gain or loss
- Abdominal swelling and/or pain
- Bloating and/or a feeling of fullness

There are four stages of ovarian cancer. In the first stage, the cancer is limited to the ovary or ovaries. In the second stage, growth of the cancer involves one or both ovaries and extends into the pelvic region. The cancer has spread beyond the pelvis and to the lining of the abdomen or to the lymph nodes in the third stage.

In the final and most advanced stage of the disease, cancer cells are found in the fluid from the cavity, which surrounds the lungs.

The National Ovarian Cancer Association says 60 percent of ovarian cancer cases are fatal with women dying within five years. Licensed Health and Workforce Professional Terrie Murray attributes this phenomenon to the large amount of blood vessels in the pelvic region. "Because of the rich blood supply to the abdomen, the likelihood of spreading to other parts of the body is much greater. That's why often times it is too late when a woman is finally diagnosed," says Murray.

Although ovarian cancer affects only women, thousands of husbands, fathers and sons endure a large financial and emotional burden each year. By being informed about risk factors, symptoms and methods of prevention, hundreds of lives can be saved each year.
Proper preparation used by students to overcome test anxiety

Follow a study schedule or make plans to study prior to the test. Successful students tend to spend a couple hours a night studying. With the proper preparation, study skills and the right mind-set college students can become successful test takers without excess anxiety. "Changing the way you view a test and applying proper study habits can make things a little less stressful and much more bearable," said Marino. If you think you need help with test anxiety, there will be a meeting held by the counseling and testing center on study and test taking skills Sept. 25 at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union, Key West, Room 218C.

Peace in the Middle East?
Hosman Sadri, a professor of political science at the University of Central Florida has won an $11,500 Fulbright Research Scholarship to see if an economic union similar to Europe's is possible.

In the summer of 2001, Sadri will go to interview government officials in the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Iran to interview government officials, business leader and leaders and ministers of trade, commerce and foreign officials. He is asking ways they think the various countries can cooperate, given the political and military realities of the region.

According to Sadri, cooperation in the region has already begun in many ways. The countries have worked together on smuggling interdiction and environmental protection.

"Sometimes,” Sadri concludes, “you can create peace by bringing countries together to cooperate on simple issues.”

UCF Art Department Appoints New Chair
Ke Francis is the new chair of UCF's Art Department. As department chair, Francis has already sketched plans for the depart­ment. "The first priority has to be to successfully accommodate [enrollment] growth while maintaining our high educational standards,” he says.

The Board of Regents has approved a Master's degree in animation and graphic design. “This would be the first master's pro­gram in the Art Department and it is something which we have given a high priority.”

His time at UCF began five years ago when he was appointed director for Friends of UCF Art Inc., Flying Horse Editions, a non­profit program that brings visiting artists to campus and does collaborative book and print projects.

Good Investment
A 1999 study requested by the Florida Office of Tourism, Trade and Economic Development shows there was a big payoff for the state's investment in the Florida High Tech Corridor - via UCF and the University of South Florida. The $6.8 million spent to support technology transfer and growth from the Space Coast to Tampa in one year generated more than $15.7 million, at least 155 jobs and $9.2 million in private sector matching investments.

Healing Lotion
Walser Zuluaga, a telecommunication technician for Facilities Planning, has developed a healing lotion that he hopes to license to a herbal products company. Forty years ago, Zuluaga had the opportunity to learn the herbal secrets of a Tikuna Indian chief while volunteering for the Peace Corps in the jungles of Brazil and Columbia.

That knowledge and years of formulation are the basis for the lotion he has patented. Zuluaga claims the blend of extracts from the chili plant and a weed that grows in the tropics "works as [an anti-inflammatory] and could potentially be used to treat carpal tunnel syndrome, tennis elbow, and poor blood circulation. I have used it myself and have had many friends and family members use it. We feel it works for us," he says.

Hole-in-One
The LEAD Scholars Program will be having a golf tournament Sunday, Sept. 24, at Twin Rivers Golf and Country Club to help raise money to support the program. It is $60 for UCF employees and includes a continental breakfast, deli buffet, golf fees, carts and range balls. Tee off is 7:30 a.m. with a four-person scramble with a shotgun start. Those who need to sharpen their skills before play­ ing the tournament can pay $12 for a 40-minute, pro-taught golf lesson at 9 a.m. Breakfast and the buffet will also be available for $3 and $9.50 for clinic attendees. Etiquette dinner to draw 200 plus CEL has spoken with the Campus Activities board about possibly getting money from them. They are also currently looking into donations from major businesses around the Orlando area.

The dinner is expected to draw about 220 UCF students, 20 more than last year. The four-course meal will include etiquette and dance instruction.

Of the 200 dinners that were paid for by CEL last year, money was collected for only 131 of those meals. Many of them were bought by CEL for V.I.P.s, or were simply left over from those who did not show up.

"I think it’s good that everyone can learn to eat at a business dinner, but I think the total bill for it is a little extreme," said junior, Mike Zambito.

An event location is still undecided at the time. CEL is concentrating heavily on using facilities at Walt Disney World.

To obtain tickets to the event, once they are open to the public, students must go to the Office of Student Activities. They will need to have their UCF student ID cards with them in order to obtain their ticket. Only one ticket per student will be available.
Record Blood Donation at UCF

After the most successful blood drive in recent UCF history, the Central Florida Blood Bank has added more incentives for September in hopes of topping August's record numbers.

The September drive, scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 19-20 at the Student Union, will offer donating students the opportunity to win a reserved parking space for a month, annual passes to Universal Studios and Sea World, and a variety of coupons from local food and entertainment establishments.

Local radio station, 102 JAMZ, will be on hand to bring some excitement to the drive, and pass out tee-shirts, CD's and other items.

Each donor will also receive one of the ever-popular "BLUD-DO-NER" tee-shirts with the croaking frogs.

Blood donations for August of 2000 were up 65 percent from 1999's numbers. The Central Florida Blood Bank collected 283 pints of blood from the August drive breaking last year's mark by 112 pints.

The prize winners from August's drive are: Angie Grimm, Book Scholarship; Tommy Rucks, Annual Seaworld Pass; Chrissy Byrum, SeaWorld one day pass; and Franco Fernandez, Blockbuster Giftcard.

September's winners will be announced after the next drive.

The Central Florida Blood Bank serves 55 hospitals in the Central Florida area. Each year the Blood Bank falls approximately 10,000 pints short of the blood needed for transfusions.

If one-third of UCF's students each donates one pint a year, the blood crisis would be eliminated.

Last week we asked everyone his or her feelings on The Future's Entertainment section's column, Sexpert Advice. We asked you "What is your opinion of the column titled The Sexpert?"

And here is what you had to say about it:

It is great! She answers all my questions. (11.1%) She provides excellent advice and is informative in her answers. (48.1%) She is informative, but I don't think I'd ask her about my personal life. (13.0%) She is not as sarcastic and funny as Nancy, from 'Nancy Knows.' (5.6%) What does she know about love, sex and relationships? Nothing! (18.5%) She shouldn't be allowed to talk about sex in a college newspaper. (3.7%)

Next week we will be polling you on your opinion of Senate's expenditure of monies.
Waiting tables not often rewarding

It's time once again for things that annoy me. This time the thing that is annoying relates to my wonderful job of waiting tables. I like waiting tables, don't get me wrong. The money is great and for the most part I like my co-workers. However, I don't enjoy many of the people whom I wait on.

First of all, I am not your slave. Surprised? Yes, I will get you some more to drink and bring you some more napkins, but you will say please and thank you. You would be surprised by how a simple please can turn my entire day around.

Also if I ask how you are, it isn't rhetorical. Then again, I don't really want your life story either.

Second, I do not cook the food. If you don't like it, don't blame me. I am not the head cook and I don't decide on the ingredients of the meal. Tell me what's wrong with it and I will try wholeheartedly to help you, but please don't reflect it in my tip, unless it is something that I had control over.

My third and final point is for students. If you don't have the money to go to a restaurant and tip, then don't go! This includes places like Denny's and Steak and Shake, those people work for tips too. And for Business majors when you graduate and get that awesome job at a big company don't forget how it was to work and go to school. I say this because for some odd reason businessmen and women are often the worst people to wait on. I have had this conversation with my father, who is a businessman, and he says that most lunches are centered around business and these men and women have little time to discuss what they would like. I understand this, but please remember that we servers are people who work hard and get paid by tips. So in closing I say please be kind to your servers and they will be kind to you. Thank you.

Book prices high around UCF

School is in session again, and it's time to get some textbooks. If you're like me, you probably waited until the end of 'add/drop' to go buy them. And so, if you're also like me, you probably experienced the horrendous lines of fellow procrastinators. But instead of immediately succumbing to the communism of the overpriced traditional bookstores, I managed to slip out of the madness and head home to my trusty computer.

Now I am no stranger to making purchases online, and I have even managed to score a bargain or two through Priceline, but as I perused the various online textbook sites, I was shocked at what I found.

To begin with, I was not able to find all of my books on one site. Then, expecting to find great bargain-basement prices, my books were only about $1 cheaper each. But my favorite part was that you had to pay an average of $7 for two to three day shipping. One site actually offers free shipping. The catch? Your books come in two to three weeks, according to the representative I called. If you want your books quicker than that, expect to shell out $16.95 for next day delivery.

To me, this seems ridiculous. I cannot even fathom how these companies have stayed in business longer than a week. Why would I pay more for textbooks that I have to wait for? Why would anyone? When I talked to an employee of a local textbook store, he informed me that local bookstores pay the same prices for books, but then inflate prices as much as they like. As someone who receives a book stipend of $300 a semester through the Florida Academic Scholars program, I find it tragic that my school prices books so the total is usually about $400. Even UCF's cost breakdown for the fall estimates book expense as $320.

It's funny that UCF's record number of students this fall aws everyone. More students, more money, right? So why is it that at the University of Florida, my books are $30-50 cheaper than at my own alma mater? Arent we supposed to be comparable to other schools these days?

Bookstores of Orlando, give us a break.

Volunteering made difficult at UCF

As a student at UCF, I firmly believe in the numerous benefits of joining these various clubs and organizations. Unfortunately UCF does not make it easy, and I feel it’s a shame someone who has the desire to belong to these organizations is not given the chance. I have been a student at UCF for over two years. Several times I have gone to the Student Activities Office in the Student Union trying to join several organizations. I filled out information with my name and address, saying I was interested in joining CAB. The same day I also filled out information for Volunteer UCF, saying that I would like to be contacted about the various volunteer opportunities that consisted of one day’s work. I was never contacted again from either of those visits. When classes started in the Fall of 2000, I again left a message for Volunteer UCF saying I was interested in some volunteer opportunities. Again I was never called or contacted.

Luckily the Orlando Sentinel has many volunteer opportunities, and I was able to volunteer with the Special Olympics in Orange and Osceola counties. I never did pursue CAB at UCF and am satisfied with my present volunteer situation, and stick with the organizations that concern my major, such as Student Council of Exceptional Education. I would like to become more involved with UCF, but I doubt they don’t make it that easy.

Student disturbed by Chris' 'Gray Matters'

I have a few comments about your 'Gray Matters' column that appeared in the Sept. 6 issue of the 'Central Florida Future.' The gist of your column was a rather unassuming attempt at Christian bashing that sounded more like it came from an uneducated layman than the person of high society that you make yourself out to be.

Your article was attempting to be a mockery of God and his followers, but all that it ended up being was a dry opinion with absolutely no merit. Some say that people who are scared and do not understand homosexuals are "homophobic"; in the same manner, I see you as a "Christophobic." I believe that if you have the ability to write in a published document that you should have some knowledge of the subject you are talking about. You obviously do not. That ‘A’ you finally received that you were wanting for so long must have made you feel really smart, because the way that you speak of your ‘mental ability’ makes it sound like you are the pinnacle of man.

I am personally offended when anyone speaks of Christians in the manner that you have in your column. In the article you make it appear that you have a higher mental capacity than all Christians, and that anyone who could possibly believe in God is a fool. How could this be? I am a very smart person, and a Christian, two things that according to you mix like water and oil. If you would like to test the mental ability of a Christian against your own, I am up for the challenge any day of the week.

I have no idea who you are, what you do, or how smart you are, but I do know that from this point on I could never respect anything that is said in your column. In lieu of your stand on this matter, I was wondering if your friend Gary is a Christian? From your description of his ignorance, and your hasty judgments, it sounds like he is almost the Pope!

I would like to say that out of everyone you described in your column (less the lady attempting to become the nurse), you are the one with the most ignorance, and I pray that someday in the future you will get over yourself, stop hating everyone else, and understand what it is like to know God instead of mock him.

Sexpert column causes campus controversy

This afternoon I picked up a copy of the 'Central Florida Future', and saw by looking through it I found myself completely disgusted by a column entitled 'Sexpert Advice.' I have read the Future in the past, and have found it to be a reasonably interesting and informative paper. However, that column is completely inappropriate!

The letter was written by a 20-year-old male requesting advice because his girlfriend wanted to become involved in a threesome. The response he received went so far as to suggest "Try substituting this third person scenario with one involving some sort of kinky sex toy, bondage, or even some good old-fashioned role-playing."

As I read this article, I was in shock! How could a newspaper of your caliber even consider printing this kind of garbage? As a newspaper, shouldn’t you be upholding better moral standards than these?

And I ask you another question: Is this the kind of article you want your parents and siblings to read? Aren’t you embarrassed by that? I hope so. I firmly believe that sex is a precious gift that should be shared only in the context of marriage. That is what it was designed for. However, your column has made it seem like some dirty act!

I know that these kinds of things do happen, but it would seem to me that you as a newspaper would try to uphold the moral standards that this country is supposed to stand on.

Thank you for your time.

By the title of my column this week you are probably guessing that I'm writing about something such as rebellion. You're close, this week it's about being politically correct. And what's the rub? I hate it. It's a disgusting thing that is strangling this country from saying what it truly feels.

I'm not quite sure when it was decided that it is necessary for everyone to be politically correct, but whenever decided this was a good thing needs to be straightened out. This is a form of censorship that is keeping people from saying what they really feel and act different from how they really want to act.

The last time I checked, this was still a free country and when someone made an album or they wrote something that was published in a public forum that they could say anything that they wanted. If people don't want to hear or read it then they don't have to. Well now we have a rapper, Marshl Mulls, who is putting lyrics in his songs that are offensive to people and they are suing and booing the man. At the Video Music Awards, hosted by MTV, Mulls was protested by a gay and lesbian group who were offended by his lyrics. They were saying something to the effect of MTV having a responsibility to limit what they put out on their channel so it was acceptible for all parties.

This is the biggest bunch of crap that I have ever heard in my entire life. You mean to tell me that people are allowed to say anything that they want but if they say offensive things to people that they are being sued for saying those things?

I don't get it, we aren't makin' you listen to the music, you have the right to turn the radio off at anytime and you dont have to buy the CD either. I don't hate people who are gay and I don't hate lesbian either. Where I run into a problem is that gays and lesbians seem to think that we have to pity them for their decisions.

I heard a lot of homosexuals who whine constantly that the general public doesn't 'treat them right' or that they are discriminated against. What exactly did you expect, the world to greet you with open arms and say 'be you love' with a smile and cookie?

I myself have faced discrimination. People often think that because I'm straight I'm not going to like them, I paint my toenails and I think that the change of my hair almost every month. So I'm forced to say, 'I'm not gay!' After I say this I almost immediately get a question like, 'You have something wrong with being gay?' and I have to say, 'No, there's nothing wrong with it at all.'

So here's the other problem. Someone out there is going to be offended by what I'm saying right now. They are going to pick up a phone and complain that I'm in cahoots with Satan and that this jamble of nonsence words needs to be cut from the paper. Which is really unfortunate for them, because if you read the bottom of the 'who's who' thing in this issue you will see a disclaimer about the ideas and opinions of all column writers are their own and not necessarily the opinion or ideas of the publisher.

Now that I've officially covered my butt and I've managed to tick almost everyone off I'm going to give you a reason as to why I've written this. I wanted you to think about being politically correct because I see so many people who conform to this type of censoring without even thinking about it. Now if you think about it and you don't have a problem, then more power to you. But if you do have a problem with it then I suggest that you stand up and say something.

Of course this is just what I think and the off chance that someone thinks that I'm wrong I want that person to tell me why I'm wrong and don't leave anything out, I promise that I will not write you back, and that I will not forgive you. My email is chrischute@hotmail.com. Thanks again for your time.

One morning on my way to class, on just a little more than four hours of sleep, with one eye still sealed shut, my open eye recognized one of those Orlando Sentinel distribution boxes now strangely found all over campus. Eager to prevent SGCA from looking like a Financial Waste Committee, and to prove that my Student Activity dollars have been put to good use, I was determined to read the Orlando Sentinel cover to cover, though I have found myself repulsed on a regular basis by this lifeless, hackneyed publication.

This particular morning The Orlando Sentinel's front page that I knew and hated had an on page of stuff, had a longer font, and was missing its fold 'that' from its traditional title.

As a closer look, sections had been color-coded, sections had been remumbled, and overnight The Orlando Sentinel's front page (now Orlando Sentinel) had transformed into a color-rich, graphic- intensive page. Sleep deprivation will cause people to interpret simple things as complex. But at the Orlando Sentinel had in fact changed its look, and had turned into something a little more pleasing and a little less repugnant that morning.

An explanation letter from the editor directed me inside to a two-page layout that described in fully accurate detail, the changes and additions that had been made, in a newspaper that had changed its look since 1982.

The old stale section titles are now replaced with shorter and more clever titles. Transportation is named Ride, the Business Section simply reads Money now, Arts and Entertainment is shortened to A&E, and The Community Database because What's Happening. Even the Weather report has become an elaborate full-length page of color maps and graphs.

The Sentinel staff also discussed that every Orlando citizen, along with the rest of the nation discovered years ago, that central Florida's entertainment scene is abundant enough to deserve daily coverage instead of weekly coverage. Entertainment coverage will now come to Sentinel readers every day in Living Sections.

My personal favorite, a column titled Quick Read, now contained half a handful worth of the Sentinel's front page summarizing main stories in each section, and directs readers to the full story inside. Minor changes like updated fonts, color-rich graphics and a smaller page size gives the Sentinel a cutting edge look comparable to high-profile newspapers like USA Today.

But will their cutting edge look be matched with comparable cutting edge content? While the old design made my stomach turn, it was the context that really brought the nausea on. Shallow headlines lined the pages of the Sentinel followed by spiritless features. Coverage of issues was limited to conservative topics and diversity was a concept the Sentinel refused to tackle.

But progress is being made in this area too. The existing Other News to Note section has been reformed and expanded to include South American, Central American and Caribbean coverage in addition to U.S. news under the title U.S. & Latin America. While the improvement is minor, it's significant enough to convince me that there are more improvements to come in the future.

Whatever the Orlando Sentinel may look like in the years to come when the major overhaul plans begin, the redesign is being watched intently by the Sentinel's editorial team and its readers. On a personal note, reading the Sentinel has perhaps become a more pleasant experience for me as well.
A wise man in funny make-up once said that rock is dead. The time I didn’t want to believe it; I thought that there would still be hope found somewhere in my burgeoning collection of CDs created by misunderstood twentysomethings from the outer rim of the greater Northwest and the sacred stack of Zeppelin vinyl passed down from an older sibling. Although not understanding all of the cries of post-adolescent rage, I somehow found a meaning behind their symphonic madness (I was young but I knew what Robert Plant was talking about when he was trying to be some lucky girl’s “backdoor man”). Education in rock ‘n’ roll is something sacredly ingrained to each new generation coupled with finding a contemporary voice that best describes what is happening at that present time. So how did this generation in a span of oh for the sake of argument lets say three years, go and muck everything up? The madness so finely paired alongside with anthems by men who seemed to say something as they sang manifested into radio-friendly riffs about tainted love and misunderstood. In some kind of bizarre transformation, front men from new bands started having delusions of being rap artists. A time when the best rock band in the world proclaimed their undying appreciation to their loyal listeners just as long as they didn’t download it into their hard drive. And a time where the best we could get out of David Lee Roth was a thirty-second drunken tirade on MTV.
Almost Famous opens September 22 nation-wide. The film is the latest by acclaimed writer/director Cameron Crowe (Say Anything and Jerry Maguire), and features a great ensemble cast as well as an autobiographical tale which rivals all of last summer's movies combined as far as overall quality.

In brief, Almost Famous is a character-driven film that centers around fifteen year old William Miller (Patrick Fugit). William is a bright young man who aspires to be an entertainment journalist, or more specifically, a rock journalist. He lives at home with his overly protective mother (Frances McDormand of Fargo), until he receives the opportunity to write for Rolling Stone magazine. His assignment is a simple one: follow the (fictionalized) rock band Stillwater and reporting turns into anything but as he is pulled into their lives. He quickly falls for Penny Lane (Kate Hudson) who is a woman who is seemingly happy but is deeply hurting on the inside.

Almost Famous leaves all its summer brethren blowing in the wind. Cameron Crowe adds to his list of top-notch achievements through the use of good story, great actors, believable characters, and a flawless approach. The relationships between all the characters are believable, which further adds to the film rather than making it hokey beyond belief. To start, the band members and the conflicts they undergo with one another feel real rather than some­thing scripted. The fights that occur between the singer Jeff Bebe (Jason Lee) and the lead guitarist Russell Hammond (Billy Crudup) are both believable and add to the message behind the film itself. Speaking of these two actors, both are brilliant in their roles. Billy Crudup once again proves himself to be a natural actor while Jason Lee plays his character flawlessly in his best performance since Chasing Amy. The relationship that most stands out is the love triangle between William, Russell and Penny Lane. The three friends really exemplify what the movie is about, which is no great surprise since they are the three central characters. As the story unfolds, each of them has to deal with a separate but at the same time interconnected issue. For Russell it is disillusionment, Penny it is lost emotion, and Russell the price of fame. As before, Almost Famous is a standup job, while Kate Hudson is perfect as a woman who is decent, but on some occasions he can overact or sound too rehearsed. Needless to say, he is not as bad as Keanu Reeves or anything.

Almost Famous is a very well done film. To classify it, one would have to say it is a "coming of age" comedic drama. While the whole "coming of age" and "man discovering himself" bits have been done many times before, Almost Famous stands out from the rest of the picture itself. The comedy is light-hearted and fun, but at the same time no one feels like they are viewing a National Lampoon's movie instead of a film about rock 'n' roll. The scene with Stillwater on an airplane during an electrical storm is a work of pure genius. Also, the whole bit with William's mother and her persistent reminders that he should "not take drugs" are equally funny. It is the drama and message behind the picture that really adds the most value. As previously mentioned, Almost Famous is a movie about the music and the complications that may arise once a level of fame has been reached. Due to fame, friends begin to fade and break their bonds as is seen in many of the scenes in which the band members quarrel. In all, this they forget about the art of music and what being a musician is all about.

Again, the movie is mostly character-driven, which is the most effective way of telling a story such as the one in Almost Famous. The ensemble cast of excellent actors convey this message to the audience in a flawless approach. The relationships between all the characters are believable, which further adds to the film rather than making it hokey beyond belief. After long hours of school and work, one can only hope to end the day with something fun. The show at Midtown Tavern on Sept. 15 was a great ending to the day. Four bands from all around Central Florida came together to play a night of great music. Midtown Tavern, located on 1792 and Fairbanks, has a very relaxed and intimate atmosphere. It’s a great place to see a show, or to sit down, have a beer and talk with friends. It’s laid back, and the bands all play on the floor. On Wednesday, it’s college night with drink specials all night long.

The night started off with a band called Hopsing. Their sound has a really nice dose of old school punk, with hints of hardcore and a tinge of ska. This was my first time seeing them, and they were impressive. Hopsing played a short 25-minute set. I definitely hope to hear more from them in the future.

The next band to play was The Hybrids. These guys flat out blew me away. It’s a shame that I haven’t had the opportunity to see them before tonight. The music is fast, catchy and very similar to The Misfits, who happen to be one of my favorite bands. The vocals resemble Danzig a lot, and they put on a really good show. If you are interested, they are playing at the Back Booth (formerly Java Jabbers) this Saturday, Sept. 23 with Blue Flame Combo.

Third was another local band, Unfisted. I have seen them a few times now, and they are awesome every single time. Seeing them makes me realize how much talent we have right in our own backyards. Unfisted has a sound that I describe as “hard-edged alternative.” They are so original that I don’t even feel comfortable comparing them to anybody. You can catch them playing local shows around Orlando all the time.

By this time, it was 12:15 a.m. After being up since 7:30 a.m. the day before, I was getting really tired. Luckily, the last band to play was Blue Flame Combo, so I knew we were all in for a good show. Even after driving an hour and a half from St. Petersburg to come play the show, they were better than ever. Even at 1 a.m., they had the entire crowd standing up and dancing to their songs. Blue Flame Combo plays a mix of rockabilly and pop punk and features the guitarist of Rocket 88. The bassist plays a stand up bass, and together they have a sound in Central Florida that is extremely hard to compare to anything else.

Both Unfisted and Blue Flame Combo just put out CDs recently, and they are both worth a listen. There is a lot of talent in Central Florida, and it’s too bad that a lot of people are missing it. Some of the clubs downtown just keep booking the same three or four bands over and over again, and it gets annoying when you notice on their schedule that the same bands are playing yet again. What I really like about Midtown Tavern is that they are extremely open minded about having all kinds of music there. Anything from gothic or industrial, to rockabilly to alternative. Every time I go there, I always walk out having had a good time. The music on the jukebox between bands is also great. There are not many jukeboxes that play rockabilly to alternative. Every time I go there, I always walk out having had a good time. The music on the jukebox between bands is also great. There are not many jukeboxes that play rockabilly to alternative. Some time ago it was noted that those who could, do. Those who can't teach. Obviously, this person has never been to the annual UCF Faculty Art Show. In case you aren't an art major, the Faculty Art Show is a chance for the University's art instructors to show that they can walk the walk, not just talk the talk. And do they ever.

The pieces housed in the UCF Art Gallery are a visual testament to the talent and creativity embodied in our very own art department. Ranging from sculpture to painting, etching to computer graphics, a variety of mediums are tackled and infused with life. The works display an intense imaginative freedom that many would swear was missing from culturally-starved Orlando, FL.

Walter Gauthier's piece 1961-2000: Art Space, Ancestral is one of the most profound works in the show. Combining large canvases and ladders, and using only shades of white, black and red, Gauthier has created a masterful look at muti and his ability (or inability) to bridge the past and the future. His minimalist renderings of man alongside technology strike a strong chord of the techno-inflation of man, mind and spirit in the ever-growing digital age.

Cheek Abraham's digital illustrations (with the help of Adobe Illustrator) of Will Rogers (King of the Cowboys) and Nat King Cole (King of Swing) showcase what the digitally-minded have long known: a computer program can be as powerful a a paintbrush or a round of clay in the hands of an artist. The streamlined beauty of his pieces demonstrate exactly what can be done with the skillful combination of technology and imagination.

The works of Kevin Haran's Interior/Exterior Series are a captivating and surreal look at everyday life. His beautiful, engaging use of color partnered with his Renaissance-master drawing skills invite the viewer to look at his world, and the items that comprise it, in an entirely different way. The series challenges the eye to view shape, form and line for its own sake and to revel in its boundless energy and potential. Have you ever read a piece of literature that challenged you by not allowing itself to be dumbed down? Well, this is art that challenges you and your intellect in that same way.

It would be quite easy to fill this newspaper from cover to cover about individual pieces of artwork and the thoughts that go along with them. These ideological misunderstandings are just the views of one student. But that's the beauty of art. The invitation from artist to viewer to step into a world where thoughts and ideas freely roam. No boundaries. No rules. No commercials. No music videos. As teachers, these faculty participants can only hope to impart this on their students. With this show, they have succeeded. True personal expression, digging deep into your soul and putting it out there to challenge the world, these are things that wouldn't be found on "Survivor." This may actually come as a shock to most students (myself included) who thought that teachers just, well...taught. But Ke Francis, Robert Rivers, Kevin Haran, as well as the other faculty members in the show, are injecting this university with a much-needed dose of style and sophistication, and giving us something other than our "Number 1 Greeknicity" to be proud of here at the good ol' UF.

Someone once said "The next time someone's teaching, why don't you get taught?" After seeing this art show, one can honestly say, "Those who can, are doing. And they're our teachers."

Aries (March 21-April 19). You’re lookin’ good on Monday, but don’t get cocky. An overlooked detail relatives over the weekend, and you may come up plans on Tuesday and get what you want from a could like a good deal on Monday could be a risky propofriend nearby, instead. Don’t let your mate or part­ Friday could be frustrating. Your latest idea doesn’t with something better. It’s a combined effort.

Taurus (April 20-May 20). Something that looks like a good deal on Monday could be a risky propo­sition. Move slowly and carefully if your money’s involved. If your sweetheart’s money’s involved, wait until Thursday. Then, something a loved one suggests you get, for the home, will be a better buy. Friday could be frustrating. Your latest idea doesn’t work that well in reality. Discuss it with friends and relatives over the weekend, and you may come up with something better. It’s a combined effort.

Gemini (May 21-June 21). Start the week by fin­ishing old projects. You’ll feel better once that’s done. Travel, or at least try something new, on Tuesday. On Wednesday domestic demands limit your range; you may have to stick close to home. The solution you’ve sought to a household problem should show up late Wednesday or Thursday. Don’t spend too much. The most likely conflict on Thursday and Friday is an argument with a loved one about money. The weekend looks like a good time to kiss and make up, and an educational game would help.

Cancer (June 22-July 22). A misunderstanding complicates matters on Monday. Take care. Expect a disagreement about priorities on Tuesday; better set your own. Another’s suggestion could fall flat on Wednesday, so don’t just do what you’re told. Use your common sense, and you’ll win admiration by Thursday. Being patient with a talkative loved one may be hard on Friday, but finding a bargain over the weekend helps take the pressure off.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22). A gamble could work Monday, but the timing’s tight. Save your money on a risky deal. Friends and lovers compete for your attention on Tuesday, much to your delight. Stick with a partner you trust. Another long shot early Wednesday’s likely to fail. Too risky, better wait. What looks like a great deal could turn sour by Friday. You’re going into a learning phase over the weekend, however. Ask questions and read a lot, and you’ll find all sorts of great answers.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You’re getting some money-making offers from Monday through Wednesday, but you’re not enthusiastic about doing the work that’s required. Is it the work or the person you’d have to work for? A conversation with a good friend late Wednesday or Thursday could help you set priorities. Don’t follow a friend’s purchasing recommendation Thursday or Friday, however. It’s apt to be way more expensive than either of you expected. You’re more likely to find a good deal far away on Saturday and Sunday.

College is an art and a science. Soon enough, you’ll discover the proper course of study is figuring out the brave new world while spending as little effort as possible.

Backstreet Hotel
The Backstreet Boys are getting ready to release their new album in November. As they prepare, the group is looking at possible real estate developments across the country, including a convention center and hotel to be built in Huntsville, Alabama. Kevin Richardson met with city officials and business partners in a four-hour meeting. Called the "preliminary meeting," the goal was to discuss the multimillion-dollar project. "We’re looking at various projects and opportunities at lots of cities around the United States," Richardson told The Huntsville Times. "I think Huntsville has got a nice civic center here. It would be nice to see a hotel in this area." Though Richardson was the only Backstreet Boy at the meeting, business partners and managers represented bandmates Howie Dorough and Nick Carter. "We do more than just sing and dance. We’ve got a brain too," Richardson told the group.

Tiger Woods Sets A New Record
Tiger Woods, 24, has signed a five-year contract with Nike that is said to be worth $85 million, making it the richest sports endorsement ever, reports The New York Times. Some say the contract is worth $100 million. The final pay out will be based upon sales making it difficult to figure out what the total pay out will be exactly. Currently, Woods has a five-year, $40 million contract with Nike. With them, Woods has his own clothing line and shoes. This contract ends in September 2001. The new deal will run through September 2006. "A lot of people have compared Tiger to Michael Jordan," Bob Wood, president of Nike Golf, told The Times, "but one thing that makes a big difference is that the career of the professional golfer is so much longer than the career of a basketball player." He added that Nike looks forward to working with Woods "for the duration of his career, which will extend to the next 20 or 25 years and beyond."

Madonna Fights For Her Name
Madonna, the pop star, isn’t the only one who’s after her name. The Madonna Rehabilitation Hospital in Lincoln, Neb., wants the rights to the Internet domain, too. The Associated Press reports that at the moment, the winner of the Who Owns The Name Madonna Contest is Dan Parisi, a New Jersey entrepreneur. Parisi reportedly has used his Madonna site to show adult material. Madonna has already asked the United Nation’s World Intellectual Property Organization to give her the domain name. The organization is expected to give an answer this month. For now, Madonna has a new opponent. “We’re hoping to get the name,” hospital spokeswoman Teresa Harms told the AP. Parisi offered to give the medical center the domain name, though Harms said she doesn’t know why.

Jane Apologizes To Liz Hurley
Jane magazine recently printed a story about Liz Hurley, in which she said ex-boyfriend Hugh Grant is “less than adequate in bed.” The magazine has admitted that one of its writers fabricated Hurley’s quotes and then formally apologized to the actress. The apology came after Hurley sent a letter to Jane, complaining that she never said anything bad about Grant’s performance in bed. “I have spoken about Hugh hundreds, if not thousands of times in the press over the years. I have never said anything mean about him and never would because I truly love him.” Hurley said in an extract from the letter. Originally Jane supported its article, saying Hurley took a sex test and all her answers were on tape. According to an Associated Press report, when the magazine’s editors reviewed a transcript of the interview, they found that it contained no derogatory statements by Ms. Hurley about Mr. Grant or her relationship with him.” Hurley and Hugh broke up after 13 years in May. However, they are still living together and the two were recently photographed together while on vacation in the Mediterranean.

Dear Sextpert,

My roommate is seeing this guy who has his scrotum and penis pierced. My concern is for my roommate: when she decides to sleep with him, does he need to use a special condom? My other concern is that he is gauging the piercing in his scrotum. What kinds of problems will this yield for him and/or her?

-Wondering, 20, female

Dear Wondering,

I did some research about this seldom discussed topic, and I found that your friend’s safety depends greatly on which “type” of piercing this guy has. For instance, the scrotum piercing really shouldn’t be harmful to either of them during sex, depending on how close the placement of the jewelry is to the penis. The ones that would present the biggest problems are the ampallang (horizontally through the head), the adhvaryu (vertically through the head) and the deep shaft (which, as the name implies, is through the middle of the shaft vertically). It should be noted that other types of piercings (the more common Prince Albert and reverse PA through the urethra) might also be harmful. Great care should be taken with any genital piercing when contemplating sexual intercourse.

Your concerns for him being able to wear a condom are valid ones. These types of piercings have a nasty habit of breaking condoms if and when the pierced one attempts to put one on. I say "if and when" because this seems like it would be another reason some couples might use to avoid wearing a condom altogether. And there is a large chance of breakage that your roommate needs to consider: is this guy worth risking contraction of an STI? You aren’t their mother (though they should be thankful to have someone that cares as much as you do), but I would recommend strongly and repeatedly that they both engage in any risky bedroom behavior. The condom should be used, after they are tested and come out clean, is the type with a reinforced tip, or even a larger reservoir tip. It’s not fail-proof, but certainly safer than the normal condom for this situation.

As for the boyfriend: gauging the piercing in his scrotum, I have never heard of this being attempted before. My greater concern is why would someone do this to himself? Piercing it should only be brought up: if the piercing is healed (after approximately five to seven months), they should try having sex with the genital jewelry removed (but leave the condom on because you never know). Given enough time, this pierced hole should be safe from closing up for an hour (or sometimes more) without the stud in place.

LEAD STORIES

- Campaign 2000: In September, Robert Solberg finished slightly ahead of Jeff Schmidt by 1.8 percent, in the Democratic primary for a U.S. House seat from Sarasota, Fla., despite revealing that he would soon plead insanity (that a robot would be responding to a charge that he beat up a police lieutenant inside a station house in March). In Maryland, the estranged wife of U.S. Rep. Albert Wyn Smith and wife are blacked out in a telephone ad for his opponent, charging that Wynn “does not respect black women (because) he left me for a white woman.” And Lannet, Al., citycouncilman Barry Waits was defeated in August, largely through the effort of candidates Rod Spraggins, who finished fourth but whose only issue was to accuse Waits of murdering his own wife two years earlier (but Waits was acquitted).

- Among recent news reports of stupefying high real estate prices in the San Francisco area: a plain three-bedroom house in a nice Palo Alto neighborhood, offered for $3,5 million (renting for $12,000 a month), and a 1,000-square-foot house in San Francisco that forested trees from door to “i,” according to an agent, offered at $799,000 but which will sell for much more because as of the first of September, 48 people had bid on it.

Rights in Conflict

- Newstand clerk Mike Redina, 44, who is blind, was fired in July because an underground boy illegally bought cigarettes from him (Hamptons, N.Y.). Chevron lost its employment discrimination case in May because its doctor recommended rejecting an application from a man with a liver disorder because the work site was a toxic partly of a refinery, and the company would almost certainly have been liable if the man had gotten sick. (El Segundo, Calif.). Parents of Michael and Jill Carrillo were forced by a court to give their son, 7, his prescribed Ritalin to regulate his school behavior despite the boy’s loss of sleep and appetite (Albany, N.Y.).

Grown-ups Setting Examples

- Never Laid a Hand on Him: Otto Benjamin II, 39, was arrested in May in Fayetteville, Ark., and charged with second-degree battery after police found that he had been disciplining his 15-year-old son by biting him, including several recent incidents that had left permanent scars (on the ear, upper nose area, lip, finger, left thigh, shoulder and right forearm).

- Teachers as Role Models: Columbus University literature professor Edward Said, 65, visiting Leibniz on July 5, was photographed throwingswineglasses at heedful students and later explained: “The spirit of the place infected everyone with the same impulse, to make a symbolic gesture of joy that the occupation had ended.” And two weeks later, New York high school teacher Ryan Ward, 30, was charged with grand larceny after his hilda started a riot on East 26th Street in Manhattan and swiped her purse.

- Des Moines, Iowa, methanologist Eric Meek filed a lawsuit in July against surgeon Scott Neil over a February incident that Meek felt took their ongoing professional feud too far. Meek said that when he walked into the operating room to work with Neil on a routine hip replacement at Mercy Medical Center, Neil grabbed the hose attached to a fluid-draining machine and splashed blood from a nearby room by spraying him with a “blood-laden” liquid.

Ironies

- Jeff Schmidt was fired in May after 19 years as a staff writer for the magazine Physics Today just after the publication of his book “Dilbertized Minds,” which argues that a hierarchical organization’s structure almost guar­antees that the most innovative solutions will be driven to the top. He was canned after a supervisor came across a telephone ad for his opponent, charging that Wynn “does not respect black women (because) he left me for a white woman.”

The Unholy Lawyer

- In July, the Law Society of Alberta, Canada, announced it had begun disciplinary proceedings against lawyer John M. Grindley to lose his license to practice because he had learned the reputation of the profession. Grindley had been finding the local bar for drunk driving, but the Law Society filed charges against him only later, after a residential eviction order had been upheld against him based on a claim by his landlord disclosed Grindley’s home so grungy and putrid-smelling that it was a hazard to public health. (Ellensburg, Wash., June). A very able executive with the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind was fined $100 for issuing himself a handicap parking card (Boston, August).

Recurring Themes

- One of the most widely circulated offbeat stories of 1999 was the Michigan conviction of convicted Timothy E. Boomier under a seldom-used state law banning public corruption. (He used the I word at least 25 times, in an area occupied by recreational boaters, including many kids.) In May 2000, Sioux Falls (S.D.) high school senior Oaktly Haigies, who had just won the top medal in the 400-meter dash at the state track tournament, was disqualified when two volunteer officials heard him say to himself ("dum" and "son of a bitch") that he had to failed to hear the record time of his older brother. Said one of the cutting officials, “When you have children, you want them to be exposed (only) to wonderful, good things.”

Thinning the Herd

- In June, a 16-year-old boy accidentally fatally shot himself in the head while firing a sheriff’s deputy who had tried to question him, according to the deputy, the boy had clumsily attempted to shoot back by firing over his shoulder on the run. And in August, a 10-year-old boy fell to his death from a place settee in Irvine, Calif., another man grabbed another in a headlock, pulled his gun, and shot him in the face, but the bullet passed through the trigger’s cheek and into the射手’s own chest, killing him.

Also, in the Last Month

- Federal prison officials, angered at a recent bribery convicts’s boast that he had planted a set of golf at a minimum-security facility, shipped him instead to the New York lockup as John Gotti’s son (Lake Placid, N.Y.). A veteran skydiver got his foot caught outside the plane (Brookfield, Wis.). A 36-year-old driver was shot in the abdomen during an one-vehicle collision when the driver pulled through the guardrail (Sarasota, Fla.).

Libra (Sept. 23–Oct. 22). Travel’s more trouble than it’s worth from Monday through Wednesday. Spend time preparing for an exam that’s coming on Thursday or Friday, instead. If you have the right answers, you’ll look and feel better when the tough questions are asked. The sun’s going into your sign this weekend, and plan a celebration with friends. Make sure you save private time for your sweet-heart, or jealousies could erupt.

Scorpio (Oct. 24–Nov. 21). Getting a loan for a household item is hard this week. A disappointment on Monday is only the beginning of more frustration through Wednesday, so don’t get your hopes up. Get together with friends late Wednesday or Thursday for an outing, but limit the gossip. Don’t bother getting upset about something you can’t change on Friday. Instead, plan to sell stuff you don’t need this weekend. Getting a few extra bucks in your pockets will help make the week a success.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22–Dec. 21). Provide information to a partner who needs it from Monday through Wednesday especially. You’re standing a little outside the line of fire, so you’re better able to dig up whatever’s needed. Something that looks like an excellent deal Wednesday or Thursday could turn into a big mess by Friday. Take care, especially if you’re spending somebody else’s money. A social outing should be lots of fun this weekend, but don’t overlook your errands. If you don’t get something you need, you’ll be sorry.

Capricorn (Dec. 22–Jan. 19). The money looks good if you can run the gauntlet on Monday. Changes in orders could clash with your roommate’s on Monday. You don’t share your dreams this weekend. You’re better able to dig up whatever’s needed. Something is hard this week. A disappointment on Monday is only more than necessary. Don’t get talked out of your savings. You don’t get upset about something you can’t change. Use your brains, as well as your brawn, and have the most success of all. Be good-looking and rich.

Aquarius (Jan. 20–Feb. 18). Don’t let love cloud your financial good sense. A loved one’s demands could put too great a strain on your budget. Move slowly from Monday through Wednesday. You may feel rich, but you could go through that much in no time at all. You can accept a new assignment on Wednesday, but don’t be surprised if you find out it won’t pay what you’d hoped by Friday. You may discover a partner doesn’t share your dreams this weekend. You may have to come up with the winning idea on your own, so don’t rely too heavily on others.

Pisces (Feb. 19–March 20). Your idea of domestic perfection could clash with your roommate’s on Monday. Your career demands attention on Tuesday, so it may be Wednesday before you have much time to talk. Listen from then through Friday, but don’t be in a hurry to act. It may be this weekend before a compromise is reached and before you know what to start building. You may decide to give up on one idea completely and to try something different than what anybody expected.

If You’re Having a Birthday This Week... Sept. 18: This could be a profitable year. Push yourself out of your rut and go for the job of your dreams. Sept. 19: Use your experience to advance. If you don’t have any, live a career field and go get some. Sept. 20: Your past accomplishments help you reach the goal you’ve been seeking. After that, you can celebrate. Don’t talk over for an answer. Sept. 21: Friends can help your career; and getting a better job leads to more friends. Rely on experience and luck. Sept. 22: Mind your manners.

The four interceptions spoiled an otherwise solid performance by Penn, who completed 25 of his 41 pass attempts, and also added an 11-yard rushing touchdown. Senior wide receiver Kenny Clark had nine catches for 78 yards, while Tyson Hinshaw added 81 yards on six catches. Sophomore Jimmy Fryzel had the best game of his UCF career, catching five balls for 109 yards, including a 61-yard touchdown in the fourth quarter. On the play, Fryzel flew past his defender on a post route, and Penn threw him the ball in stride, giving the Zip defense no hope of catching him. Senior running back Eddie Mack rushed for 55 yards on 13 carries, but sprained his ankle in the game and played only sparingly in the second half. His replacement, redshirt freshman Corey Baker, showed some great moves and a quick first step in gaining 34 yards on eight carries.

After the game, UCF Head Coach Mike Kruczek revealed that he sent backup quarterback Ryan Schneider to warm up after Penn’s fourth interception, but the Golden Knights got the ball back on the very next play by way of a fumble recovery. Kruczek didn’t feel that Schneider had enough time to warm up, and put Penn back in the game. Kruczek said that he planned on getting Schneider, a redshirt freshman, some significant playing time this week against William & Mary.

I think I’m going to give a lot of time to Ryan in the ballgame, Kruczek said. A lot of time may be a quarter, I don’t know. I just have to go back and look at the reasons why Vic threw the interceptions that he did. It’s just that we’re not consistently able to take care of the ball. I love him like a son. He competes and he does things to the best of his ability and I just have to evaluate things.

Junior linebacker Tony Hardman led the Golden Knight defense with eight tackles, while Elliot Shorter added seven tackles, including one for lost yardage. Cornerback Asante Samuel had three tackles, and got his first career interception in the fourth quarter. Junior middle linebacker Tito Rodriguez made four tackles in his first game action of the year after having arthroscopic knee surgery in fall preseason camp.

UCF (1-2) returns to action Sept. 23 against The College of William & Mary (1-2) at 6:00 p.m. in the Florida Citrus Bowl.

Kruczek thought about pulling Penn in the fourth quarter
For Mack, fifth year is the charm was he, not Mack, who was named the opening day starter in 1999.

Wait your turn.

This year, it is finally Mack's turn. He won the starting job in spring practices and held off redshirt freshman Corey Baker in fall camp. Head Coach Mike Kruczek says that Mack is "obviously our best running back right now." But being the starting running back at UCF isn't always a glamour position. Kruczek's offense emphasizes the passing game, not the running game; putting the running backs in a blocking role more often than it puts the ball in their hands. Still, Mack expects himself to play a major role on the team.

"Everybody knows that we’re not a big running team, so we have to take advantage of every chance we’re given," says Mack. "I think I’m progressing pretty well for the amount of carries that I’m given. I’m trying to take advantage of every opportunity and make the best out of it; trying to take advantage of every carry because I know they’re going to be limited."

Despite Mack’s limited playing time over the past four years, one can find his name scattered all over the UCF record books. Ninth in career rushing yards, Third in career average yards per carry, Fourth in career kickoff return yardage. Owner of the Golden Knights only 100-yard rushing game by a running back in the past two years. For all those numbers, however, Mack's greatest asset to the team this year could be his great knowledge of Kruczek's offense. His five years in the system have taught him where he should be on the field, who to block, and when to block them. Kruczek has said that one of the main reasons Mack is the starter is because of his mental abilities, not just his physical abilities. But this knowledge of the offense has increased the frustration of a 1-2 start to the season for Mack.

"You put in so much hard work and go out there and you have a game plan and you see it doesn’t work right before your eyes and then all of a sudden it works, but then we’re hurting ourselves," says Mack. "It hurts a lot knowing from the jump that you can beat these guys and then from your own mistakes you lose the game."

So far this season, Mack has gained 155 yards on 40 carries and scored two rushing touchdowns, all of which lead the team. And those numbers are skewed by the fact that he sprained an ankle and played only sparingly in the second half of the Golden Knights’ 35-24 loss to Akron. Mack, however, says he will be fine, and there is not a lot of reason to argue with him. Think you’ll see him missing practice this week or sitting out next week’s game against William & Mary just because of a sprained ankle? Don’t count on it, it’s his turn.

Mack is currently in ninth place on the UCF career rushing list.

Leadership Excellence Starts Here

Rodriguez returns from knee surgery surprise for any receiver coming over the middle of the field, however, as the junior is one of UCF's biggest hitters. At 6'2', 235 pounds, Rodriguez is an intimidating physical presence that can bench press 345 pounds and squat 575 pounds. And his return to the team will not only help the Golden Knights from a personnel standpoint, but also from the leadership that Rodriguez exhibits, which is a role that he takes very seriously.

I just take it one play at a time and try to get everything out of everybody, said Rodriguez. I try to tell them that we need everything we got, and we just take it all from there.

Returning from arthroscopic knee surgery is no easy task, but Tito Rodriguez appears to have come through the process unscathed. His resolve to get back on the field helped him return sooner than some may have expected, and will no doubt push him to play to the best of his abilities for the rest of the season. Which, by the way, means he will be getting more than four tackles per game.

and Head Coach Mike Koczek has been unhappy with Penn's inconsistency and failure to hit wide-open receivers. Koczek did put backup Ryan Schmiedt in against Northwestern State, and has said that he would like to do that again against William & Mary.

"I think that I'm going to give a lot of time for Ryan in the ball game (against William & Mary)," said Koczek. "A lot of time may be a quarter, I don't know. I just have to go back and look at the reason why Vic threw the interceptions that he did. He tends to just throw the thing up for grabs and you can't do that. I love him like a son.

He competes and he does things to the best of his ability and I just have to evaluate things." Wrapping up the quarterback is, the Golden Knights will have a chance to even their record at 2-2 on Saturday, and would love to make a statement by blowing out William & Mary out. If UCF can win all of its remaining games until the last two weeks of the year when they play Alabama and Virginia Tech, and then upset one of those two teams, then this season can still be a rather successful one. But, until the Golden Knights play up to their potential, UCF fans and players alike are going to be stuck asking, "What happened?"
Rodriguez makes his presence felt in first game back

DAVID MARSTERS  STAFF WRITER

Four tackles in a losing effort usually wouldn't signify a great game for UCF junior middle linebacker Tito Rodriguez. For a player who has had his best career games against the likes of Georgia, Auburn, and Florida, four tackles in a 35-24 loss to Akron last Saturday wouldn't normally seem like a lot. But usually and normally are words that do not apply to Rodriguez's situation.

The graduation of star middle linebacker Deandre Devine last year left a large hole in the middle of the UCF defense. In spring practices, Head Coach Mike Kruczek moved Rodriguez from his natural outside linebacker spot into the middle, forcing Rodriguez to learn a whole new position in spring and fall practices. But early in fall camp, he hurt his knee and had to have arthroscopic surgery. His rehabilitation program kept him out of practice and games until just last week; something that Rodriguez says was extremely difficult to deal with.

It's pretty tough when you're just sitting there watching and you want to lead the team, said Rodriguez. But I can't try to push myself and the coaches were just trying to do what was best. My knee feels good. It doesn't feel tight or anything else, so it feels pretty good.

Rodriguez saw his first game action of the season against Akron, making four tackles, including one for lost yardage. And though Rodriguez received the Outstanding Defensive Rookie Award in 1998, the team's Big Stick Award for a bit against Ball State that season, and had 57 career tackles entering this year, he might consider those four tackles his greatest accomplishment at UCF so far.

It meant a lot to come back after my surgery, said Rodriguez. I tried to get back as fast as I could, but I wanted to make sure I was 100 percent. It felt good out there, I just wish we could have came out with a win.

In Rodriguez's absence, junior Willie Davis has filled in admirably. Davis, who is another converted outside linebacker, as second on the team in tackles through the season's first three games. But it has become readily apparent that the team misses Rodriguez's presence and leadership on and off the field.

Kruczek said that while the immediate impact of Rodriguez against Akron may not have been earth-shattering, it would grow to be much greater as the season progresses. It was nice to have him out there, said Kruczek. I think it's going to be a big lift down the road, I'm not sure how much it was in this game. I thought Tito made some plays today that were a pleasant surprise.

Rodriguez's return will not be a pleasant

The Golden Knights women’s soccer team continued their dominance of the Trans America Athletic Conference on Sept. 13, shutting out Florida Atlantic 1-0 at the UCF Soccer Field. The win improved UCF’s regular season conference home unbeaten streak to 23 games and was their ninth consecutive regular season shutout of a TAAC opponent.

Sophomore striker Nicole Cieslak scored the lone goal for the Golden Knights, deflecting a corner kick by senior midfielder Cally Howell past the FAU goalkeeper. UCF sophomore goalkeeper Amanda Coble recorded her first career shutout without having to make a save.

“I think we were creating a lot,” said senior forward Amanda Cromwell. “We had chances to score, but the finishing focus has to be stronger.”

Cromwell, however, emphasized the importance of winning non-conference games as well as conference games.

“Every game we go out to play we have to win,” said Cromwell. “Conference wins are definitely the priority. We need to start winning non-conference games to start getting noticed.”

“I think we’re coming around and getting more organized,” said senior midfielder Claire Kohake, who knocked the ball into the open net for her first goal of the season. The Trojans had a chance to put the game away in the 87th minute, but Banuls made a spectacular save on Cally Howell’s point-blank header in the second, said Cromwell. This game was back-and-forth, very competitive. Things like that change the momentum and we had the momentum in the second half. They’re a top 25 team, so for the girls to play so well and come away with a loss is heartbreaking.”

UCF Nearly Upsets #6 Southern California

Southern California scored two goals within seven minutes in the second half, coming from behind to beat UCF 2-1 at Megan Beard Stadium in Gainesville, Florida. Both teams battled heavy rain and wind gusts up to 35 miles per hour from Hurricane Gordon and were forced to play on a field that resembled a swamp.

The Golden Knights scored first in the 11th minute when a cross from Cally Howell was tipped away by USC goalkeeper Shaelyn Fernandes right to senior midfielder Claire Kohake, who knocked the ball into the open net for her first goal of the season. The Trojans came back in the second half, however, getting their first goal when Jackie Fodor fired a shot that was blocked by UCF goalkeeper Maria Banuls, but the rebound skidded away to Ali Fennell who scored on the open net. Fennell later scored the game winner, redirecting a pass from Jessica Edwards. Fernandes recorded two saves in the win for USC, and UCF’s Banuls had an impressive performance despite the loss with eight saves.

The UCF defense played a big role in what was likely their best game of the year so far. USC had a chance to put the game away in the 87th minute, but Banuls made a spectacular save on a penalty kick by USC’s Ibiatu Harvey, a three-time All-American midfielder.

The defense is stepping up and winning balls in the air, said Cromwell. They’re anticipating well and reading the play. (Sophomore defender) Sara (McDonald) was huge Friday night and today. She’s strong on the ball, like sliding to win the ball. She’s doing a good job as well as Jackie (VanLoven), Brooke (Asby), and Christie (Martell).”

UCF (2-7-1 TAAC) will play Florida State on Sept. 22 at the Seminole Soccer Tournament in Tallahassee, and will matchup with Eastern Carolina to close out the tournament on Sept. 24.

Former Golden Knight Baseball Player Promoted to Majors

Former UCF standout baseball player Chad Mottola was called up to the Toronto Blue Jays late season 40-man roster earlier this month, making his 2000 debut on Sept. 6 in a 7-3 Toronto win over the Seattle Mariners. Mottola batted third in the lineup, going 2-fer-3 with two RBIs in the game. Mottola, 28, began his professional career in the Cincinnati Reds' farm system and made his Major League debut in 1996 with the Reds. He played in 35 games that season, hitting .215 with three home runs and six runs batted in. This season, Mottola was named the Most Valuable Player of the International League for the Blue Jays AAA club, the Syracuse SkyChiefs. The outfielder hit .309 (7th in the IL), with 33 home runs (1st) and 102 RBIs (2nd). Mottola also stole 30 bases (6th), making him a member of the coveted 30-30 club (30 home runs and 30 stolen bases), a rare feat in minor league baseball.

Mottola also ranked fourth in the International League with 156 hits, and tied for first with a .566 slugging percentage. He also ranked fourth in home runs (3-6), returns to action at Raider State, finishing in 19th place for UCF. Former University of Miami star Sean McCabe, 172nd, 28:39; senior Mike Haas, 193rd, 28:58; and freshman Ben Taylor, 198th, 29:03. The College of William & Mary was the men's team champion.

The Golden Knights will return to action on October 7 at the Disney Invitational, held at the Disney Wide World of Sports.

UCF Men's Soccer Earns Tie With Evansville

Two goals within three minutes of each other helped UCF back from a 2-0 deficit in the second half to tie Evansville 2-2 on Sept. 15. Terrence Gannan put Evansville (0-2-1) on the board in the 20th minute with an unassisted goal. Jeff Rymer then put the Purple Aces up 2-0 in the 53rd minute, scoring off a cross from Jeremy McKinnon. The Golden Knights scored an unassisted goal in the 71st minute, when freshman midfielder Kostas Koskiniemi scored unassisted off a header. Less than three minutes later, junior forward Reni Hartz took a cross from sophomore midfielder Brain Iverson and beat Evansville goalkeeper Ed Moore for the game-tying goal. The two teams played two complete overtime periods, but neither could score and the game ended in a tie. Sophomore goalkeeper Memur Toniu saved two shots for the Golden Knights, while Moore saved four for the Purple Aces.

UCF continues to look for its first win of the season, and will get a chance this week with two games at the UNC-Charlotte Tournament in North Carolina. The Golden Knights play Virginia Tech on Sept. 22 and Memphis on Sept. 24.
UCF hopes to get back on track against William & Mary

Back in 1996, UCF met William & Mary in what was the Golden Knights' first game in Division I-A. That day, Darrie Culpepper rallied UCF from a fourth-quarter deficit to pull out a 39-33 game, but Daunte Culpepper rallied victory over the Tribe. Many things have happened to him about being the ninth-leading rusher in the school, has also begun the season with a first game in Division I-A. That day, Vic Penn in what was the Golden Knights' story of his career. As a true freshman in 1996, he played in 10 games and was named the team's Outstanding Offensive Rookie. But prior to his sophomore season, Mack suffered a hamstring injury that hurt his chances of getting playing time and was forced to sit out the year to obtain a medical redshirt. Also returning is the team's leading tackler from a year ago, junior defensive end Chris Stahl. The Tribe plays a 4-4 defense, which should leave a lot of UCF receivers in single coverage, something that the Golden Knights will likely be able to exploit.

One of the major questions for the Golden Knights entering this game will be the quarterback situation. Despite having reasonably good numbers, UCF starter Vic Penn has thrown five interceptions, and Head Coach Mike Kruczek has been turnover., and we gave them opportunities and they took advantage of the opportunities. Akron cornerbaulk Dwight Smith, who is considered to be a pro prospect, had three of the four interceptions, and also blocked a UCF field goal attempt late in the fourth quarter. Akron quarterback Butchie Washington completed 14 of 24 passes for 225 yards, two touchdowns and one interception. Washington's main target was senior wide receiver Lavell Bailey, who had six catches for 131 yards and two touchdowns. The Zips were also very successful in their running game, getting 100-yard performances from two different running backs, Brandon Payne gained 138 yards on 24 carries, while Jimmie Gray gained 111 yards on 16 carries. Fullback Tony McGay had five carries for 25 yards, and scored two rushing touchdowns.

Patience is a virtue, or so they say. And whilst that sounds nice as an oft-used cliche, patience is not always an easy thing to have. Ask UCF senior running back Eddie Mack about patience.
