School can't afford to destroy greenhouse

Condemned building could move again

Until recently, freshmen, seniors and others filled the Stockard Conservatory, located on the arboretum at the Arbor, with their voices and screams. Now, they're stilling on talkies, reserved in a patient's Larry to fight against the cold.

Their house is falling apart, and UCFS officials know it. They can't even afford to fix it up.

The greenhouse, part of UCF since 1973, needs about $100,000 to fix it. As it stands, the concrete glass roof is stained a rain-soaked brown, where punch-holes haven't crept and fall to the ground. In July, the fire magic condemned the building. A motor latched to the front door was its undoing. One man went inside without a hard hat. It once housed an abundance of plant life, but now it's filled with weeds and mould. The only plants still move it if is a bed, because they live there.

The Flabberflugger flyer said an annual tree was linked to the building. They can't even afford to tear it down.

The situation of the greenhouse is filled with warnings and cautions. The greenhouse is covered in green, black and red tape. The green tape is the no-go tape. The red tape is the warning tape. The black tape is the caution tape. The purple tape is the suspension tape.

The greenhouse is a thing of the past. It's a place where students and professors can find a moment of peace and quiet. It's a place where they can escape from the hustle and bustle of college life.

Greek students look to rebuild

CHUCK TOLMAN

The Greek community picked itself up and danced itself off after a rocky and troupeful fall. With the suspension of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, fraternity from activities and Zeta Phi Beta, severely sanctioned by its national headquarters, the community has a lot of healing to do.

"We're not in a positive light," said Mark Lint, president of the Interfraternity Council, about the SAE situation. "We are taking steps toward Greek unity (so far, so good)."

When asked about the punishment that SAE received, Lint said, "They are taking all the correct pages. The punishment was fair.

The fraternity was suspended by UCF Oct. 4 for one year. They are now in a bid to obtain 15,000 signatures to recall the suspension. If UCF upholds the punishment, "We go on for the community, but not for us," Lint added.

This lack of recognition is a problem for the fraternity and Interfraternity Council. The Greek community spent 10,000 hours on charit..."

Leaders of two groups that advise the National Science Foundation—Coordinating Board and National Research Council—announced that they had reached an agreement that will bar within two years some scientists from receiving funding.

The new policy was announced last week. It follows a decision by the National Academy of Sciences to adopt similar restrictions.

The new policy was adopted by the National Academy of Sciences earlier this year. It bars scientists who have been found to be guilty of scientific misconduct from receiving federal research grants.

The new policy will also bar scientists who have been found to be guilty of falsification, fabrication, plagiarism, or other serious scientific misconduct.

The new policy will take effect on January 1.

The National Academy of Sciences said that it had already barred some scientists from receiving research grants. It had also barred scientists who had been found to be guilty of scientific misconduct.

• The report found that one-fifth of British adolescents aged 15 to 16 said they smoke regularly, and one-fifth use drugs. Alcohol contributes twice as many Americans as the highest in Europe, and binge drinking is becoming a serious problem. One in five teens has a psychological problem, such as depression, eating disorders, anxiety or stress. One in 10 girls aged 15 to 19 have the sexually transmitted disease chlamydia that can lead to infertility.

Dr. Russell Viner, a London adolescent health doctor and a coauthor of the report, wrote, “This generation will be the next generation, and they will have the same issues as their parents.”

Authors of the BMA report on adolescent health see the unhealthy conditions of Britain’s current generation as a new generation of health challenges. The report introduces a variety of solutions: reducing smoking and drinking among teens has a psychological impact on the rest of society. The report proposes that better care should be available, that the government must focus on the messages about health and that there should be more emphasis on sex education and drug resistance training.

Silicone implants were first made available to the medical market in the 1960s. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approved the implants for breast augmentation in 1962. Silicone implants were marketed as a safe cosmetic technique to enhance the safety of the 10-year-old device to make more than a decade after reports of problems prompted a ban in sales.

The ruling, which went against the recommendation of a deeply divided FDA advisory panel, surprised some medical and health officials. Denying an emotional three-day hearing in October, arbitrators said research data was insufficient and did not answer how often the implants rupture, how to detect complications early and what women should do when their device fails.

Informed Corp., of Santa Barbara, Calif., one of only two manufacturers left in the one-time liberal-implant market, predicted to processors in its efforts to win approval to market the silicone gel implants.

FDA officials Wednesday issued new guidelines defining the information they need from manufacturers to assess the safety and effectiveness of implants. "One of the goals is to decrease the rupture rate, but also to understand the consequences of rupture," FDA medical device chief David Trafel said during a press conference.

Silicone implants will continue to be available to breast reconstruction and breast augmentation patients through studies conducted by manufacturers to assess safety and effectiveness. In addition, 20 females who received silicone implants through these studies will require FDA approval.

That was the sentiment nearly 6.5 percent of the student body expressed when the Student Union approved the new rule, with the only warning that candidates would not be allowed to coerce voters to cast their ballot that takes advantage of tax relief described in the 2001 tax cuts. Ironically, former President Bill Clinton's tax reform bill of 2000 was signed into law during the last week of the election, and Clinton appeared on television to support this team. The arena should be hands down. The university's decision on this issue is simply unjust due to its effects on the university and its students.

Dear Editor,

I am writing regarding UCF basketball. Frankie fixation on a team play, hard no less. While it's a good idea, it doesn't solve the problem of the team's low attendance.

Perhaps it's just me, but any reasonable person cannot reasonably support voting as a strategy (like we saw in Florida) for the next election, as the numbers that the Bush administration likes to use are about 1/4 of a percent and clearly do not represent the vote of the people. The numbers are higher, but they don't represent the vote of the people. The numbers that the Bush administration likes to use are about 1/4 of a percent and clearly do not represent the vote of the people.

Thus, Bush's political address opened with a typical assertion. "To be specific, focused on education and economic recovery, not to mention the trillion in income tax cuts. The arena should be hands down. The university's decision on this issue is simply unjust due to its effects on the university and its students.
