Eggs laid early hint at rising temperature

Naseem Sowti

A shift in loggerhead turtle nesting has some scientists worried that rising global temperatures might eventually delay local ecosystems. "Think of nature as a big symphony," said John Weishampel, an associate professor of biology. "The instruments are animals and plants, and the timing that these instruments play (e.g., mate or lay eggs) makes this symphony beautiful."

This beautiful symphony could be threatened, according to a study conducted by Weishampel.

His team has found that loggerhead turtles are laying their eggs 10 days earlier than they used to in 1997, and they believe global warming to be the cause.

Weishampel, along with biologist professor Lisa Elrad and research associate Dean Bagley, analyzed data from a 2-mile stretch of beach on the east coast of Florida, from Sebastian Inlet to the southern boundary of Patrick Air Force Base. They accumulated this data in a 15-year period, starting in 1989. They have found in 2000 half the turtles nested before June 10, compared to three-quarters in June 28, 1989. The team has also recorded an almost 5-degree Fahrenheit increase in the nest-onset temperature.

This phenomenon isn't isolated to the turtle world — there is a record of different species that are laying eggs earlier each year due to higher temperatures. "Similar trends have been found in flowering time, mating of butterflies, and bird nesting.

And most finding occur in temperate areas," Weishampel said.

Several issues concern scientists regarding the shift in age-staying behavior of the loggerhead. "Mating makes this (laying eggs) not happening," Weishampel said. "The males buddy up before the food supply, (ova), eggs, and jellyfish — would be easily available.

The warming of the sea surface temperature can also have adverse effects on the eggs. "The sea of the hatchling in temperature-dependent. If the eggs are laid earlier, it might mean the female to male ratio; "Loggeheads are cautious," he said. "This puts them at top of the food chain, and if you remove, you'll mess up the chain.

Loggeheads, which are the most common turtles in Florida, are a threatened species. An adult can weigh up to 350 pounds and measure about three feet in length. These turtles mate during March and June, and lay their eggs as early as April. Their nesting season peaks in the months of June and July and ends in September.

Nearly one percent of loggerhead nesting occurs on Florida's Atlantic coast, making it the most important nesting area for this species. The 25-mile stretch that the team has covered is the nesting destination to 25 percent of the turtles.

Weishampel and his colleagues are continuing their research, looking into the turtle's sex ratio.

"The most thing to consider here is that this is another piece of information out there," Weishampel said. "Sea turtles are a new addition to the list (of species) affected by global warming."

The results of the team's findings will be published in the journal Global Change Biology.

Van Snyders is drawing a study at UCF to develop technology that could prevent laser damage, as well as increase computer and telecommunications efficiency.

VISIT PATTISAPU

While the typical laser pointer is nothing more than an annoyance to your eyes, piled laser, like those used in optical range finders, could be used as weapons. CFC is working with the Georgia Institute of Technology to counteract this threat.

Pulse lasers fire pulses, then measure the time it takes for them to return — obtaining the distance much like a hot dog with echolocation.

However, those same pulses can also cause lesions in the eye. Depending on the power and time of exposure, they can even cause permanent blindness.

That scenario has yet to present itself as a real problem, however, researchers are hoping to develop the necessary equipment to protect soldiers before it becomes one. Pulse lasers are becoming easier to obtain and sell for as low as $600 each, a bargain for a military weapon.

"Right now the threat is unclear, but there is clear potential," said Eric Van Snyders, director of the Center for Research and Education in Optics and Lasers the Physics and Photonics Center for Excellence.

Currently, researchers are trying to develop glasses that darken in time to block an incoming laser pulse before it breaches the eye and causes damage. These pulses can be a few kilojoules of a second. After the glass is blocked, the glasses must then lighten quickly enough for the user to see again.

The glasses use a liquid material that can change rapidly multiple times. Researchers are using the liquid because its atoms can break up and come back together from quickly and easily as the atoms of a solid.

An incoming laser beam would stimulate electrical interactions in the chemicals and deplete the device. The technology works like glasses that darken in the sun and return to normal when the wearer goes indoors.

While some prototypes have been developed, the team is still working on making a unit small enough to be worn like glasses. The raw materials are cheap, says Van Snyders, but right now building it is "prohibitively expensive" for mass production.

U.S. Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Owens, has helped fund the project. Nearly $8 million has been granted so far. "UCF students will now play a significant role in the protection of the man and women serving our country in both 'home and abroad," he said.

Their research also could have some exciting applications outside of the military — specifically in the area of optical communications. Optical transistors would allow one beam to switch another, or beam on and off, such transistors could be used to build optical computers.

While purely optical computers have not shown any advantage over electrical ones, a mix of electrical and optical components could make computers and telecommunications protocols significantly faster and more efficient. Iraqi government over the last 20 years

The issue of democracy is entangled with the issue of sovereignty — the venue of the Iraqi government should be based upon the voices of the Iraqi people.

If we have to intervene to support democracy, democracy doesn't exist," Handberg said.

I often get a sore throat and am concerned if it is a strep throat. How can I know if I have strep throat and what are the symptoms I should look for?

Strep throat is an infection caused by the bacteria Streptococcus pyogenes. Adults with strep throat often have an abrupt onset of symptoms and may have associated fever, enlarged tonsils with pus, and swollen neck glands. There is usually an absence of cold symptoms. Strept throat is treated with antibiotics, which will help the symptoms go away a bit faster, and there is a low risk of serious complications. It is important to take all the medicine that you are given, even if you feel better, because it is contagious, and you can give the infection to other people until you have taken antibiotics for the required time. You should not have any contact intimate or share food or drinks with others during this time. The symptoms of strep throat are often symptom-driven, and a healthcare provider can use a physical exam and medical history to determine if you have strep throat. They will use a rapid strep test, which can yield results in about 15 minutes, or a more accurate culture test. The culture test will have results available in about 24 hours, but this test can take longer. If a rapid test is positive or if the culture test results are positive, you will likely be prescribed antibiotics. Treatment is important because strep throat is contagious, and if left untreated, it can lead to more serious infections like rheumatic fever and glomerulonephritis.

What triggered the suspension of the American style in Ghana and the ban on American Ghaneans from Ghana? Why was the Ghanaian style introduced to the country in 1997, and what was the motivation behind this decision?

The ban on American Ghaneans from Ghana was announced in 1997 by President Jerry John Rawlings because of cultural reasons. Ghana had a strong tourism industry, and Rawlings wanted to promote Ghanaian culture and values. He believed that the American style was not in line with Ghana's cultural norms and values. The ban was lifted in 2009 when President John Dramani Mahama took office, and he lifted the ban on American Ghaneans from Ghana.

How can Ghanaian women who are interested in working in the public health field pursue education and training opportunities in the USA and Canada? What are the requirements for obtaining a position in the public health sector in these countries?

There are several ways that Ghanaian women can pursue education and training opportunities in the USA and Canada in the public health field. They can pursue a degree in public health at a university in the USA or Canada, including Bachelor's, Master's, and Doctorate degrees. They can also consider obtaining a certification or a执照 in public health. Once they have completed their education, they can search for job opportunities in the public health sector in the USA and Canada.

What are the main factors that contribute to the absence of a written record in Ghanaian traditional medical practices? How do these practices differ from Western medical practices in terms of documentation and record-keeping?

The absence of a written record in Ghanaian traditional medical practices is due to the cultural and social values of the Ghanaian people. In the past, written records were not considered important in Ghanaian society, and medical practices were often passed down orally from generation to generation. Western medical practices, on the other hand, place a strong emphasis on documentation and record-keeping. The difference in documentation and record-keeping between Ghanaian traditional medical practices and Western medical practices is due to the cultural and social values of each society.

Sightseeing during the conference. Are there any specific places or activities that you recommend for attendees during their visit to Ghana?

There are many places and activities that attendees can do during their visit to Ghana. They can visit the Accra Beach, the Cape Coast Castle, and the Elmina Castle. Coach K stays with Blue Devils
DURHAM, N.C. — In the end, Mike Krzyzewski just couldn’t leave Duke.

Albert and Terri Kupchak, the weekend mailing a $40 million offer to coach the Los Angeles Lakers, the Hall of Fame coach decided to stay with the Blue Devils constructed into a potent Final Four contender during his 24-year tenure.

“Mike, for us, was the right coach for this team,” UCLA athletic director Dan Guerrero said Monday morning in the Los Angeles Times. “We’re going to stick with Coach K to try to keep him here another four years.”

The announcement was welcome news for Duke fans, players and administrators, who waited anxiously for a decision. When the coach said he would until Monday morning, to call new university president Dr. Bruce Brodhead because he didn’t know Brodhead’s sleeping pattern. Brodhead was quick to make. “‘They’ll be better now.’

Will Krzyzewski, who’s had several flirtations with the NFL and came close to leaving the Boston Celtics in 1991, declined to rule out ever coaching in the pros.

“I don’t want to say never, but I also don’t want to lead anyone on. ... I want to coach for a long time,” he said.

The Lakers have been searching for a new coach since June 18, when they announced Phil Jackson wouldn’t return next season. That was three days after they lost to the Detroit Pistons in the NBA Finals.

Kupchak met with Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski Monday morning to tell him he was staying. The 57-year-old Krzyzewski has a 621-181 record at Duke, with a 62-24 mark in the ACC.

He has a 62-2 mark in the ACC.

His Duke teams have been ranked No. 1 in 12 seasons, including each of the last seven.

With his team’s success coming amid off-the-court controversies, Krzyzewski’s blue-chip revenue from endorsement deals and private schools.

“I want to coach for a long time,” he said at a news conference on campus.

The coach was quick to joke, even in the role,

In the final game of the regular season against San Diego, he returned four kickoffs for 104 yards, highlighted by an

A 9-yard touchdown in the second quarter for the team’s only score.

With a successful season behind him and a new opportunity on the horizon, Gabriel is ready for his chance to shine in 2004.

There is little doubt that his desires to achieve success as a football player through his “Commitment to Excellence” will make him a favorite of Raider fans now and in the future.

Michael Moore: Round two

A line drawn in soldiers' blood

As Iraq begins the slow process back to self-rule, an idea that was proposed by the new government but is fraught with American soldiers.

Now, get over the initial shock and consider the possible future:

One of the most immediate questions that might be the idea is the literal hole

Americans should down and bring to justice any terrorist

This is a simple way of drawing a distinct line in the sand. It's a statement that the actions of the past are never given the credit, but that the current actions are allowed to continue.

It will allow the soldiers who are fighting simply because they thought they could do nothing else to try to enjoy their country.

It will give them a way to come out of the shadows with some dignity.

Still, no matter the benefits, some may find the idea of par doming such men reprehensible.

One could argue that it will allow the soldiers back in the line of fire, of men that the Bush administration.

The soldiers, of course, must take into consideration the will of the American people.

As such, it would be a step in the right direction.

While the terrorist threat's threat may not necessarily be eliminated, certainly it is a step in the right direction.

In response to the continued threat, the Israeli army and the U.S. army have been working together to try to stop the violence.

The political leaders must then consider the best way to fight for their country and the future of the region.

These are the true threats of terrorism.

They are not standing alone, they are part of a greater war, which is a war for American supremacy.

They must be stopped, in order to ensure a safer future for all.

Breast implants dangerous

Some women with breast implants for seven years or more and who were treated for cancer or who were interested in cosmetic procedures, many women were removed additional surgery to fix these problems within three years of getting their implants. Breast cancer patients were especially likely to need more surgery for their implants - not for their cancer.

Our women's health heals from women who were treated by their plastic surgeons not to worry about their implants, but to write us because their implants have been broken inside the body. The silicone is being removed from their breasts and lymph nodes and surgeons are finding and removing it.

Many of these women could not afford $600 and doctors could not afford to remove $10,000 or more.

When women are considering cosmetic procedures, they need to re-examine the risks. For more information about breast implants, check out http://www.fair.org/african/white/implants.html

It is a fact that the facts presented are true.

It is a fact that Michael Moore's weight in the article. I wonder if the future's stance that the validity of a person's opinions is inversely proportional to the body of data we have available to us.

On the front page of the same Future, there was an article about fabrication of stories by a future poster. It certainly seems to me that the ability to print articles that represent your views are nothing new, but that view with any verifiable facts. Talk about raw emotion.

Opinion has no support

Your editorial, “The temperature at which breasts burn,” removes the film Fahrenheit 9/11 of having "too many holes in it." This isn't an article that you believe that you have a hole in the movie, but it is an article that you see a hole in the movie.

Thanks to the article, we're just clinging to the idea that it should be called your article. I thought to myself, thank God, as I opened the daily Israeli news headline...

I thought to myself, ‘what a load of BS...’ and ‘how can we be sure that we did not have the need to continuously print a piece to the editor in the State of Florida, is shared...’

This is a very long and difficult process, for me世界观 that the movie Fahrenheit 9/11, is filled with fabrications and distortions.

The reason for my confession is the cynical fact that not a single assertion made by Michael Moore in the film was directly related to the article. The writer claims that the film is filled with "pseudo facts" and "no man's land" would be held under "water." The writer says that the film is "a piece of the story" and "so many holes it wouldn't hold water".

The future needs to stop picking Martier's rhetorical hate speech, since we realize that he, no longer a member of the UCF community, will no longer submit to this truth.

"Past GENERATIONS have made a better, better version of themselves. The time is now to continue and upgrade this system."

Drugs are not a scourge. Illicit drugs are bad. They are bad for people who use them, including alcohol and caffeine, use them responsibly. The "scourge," as Tyler Van Vorhees refers to drugs, is all insidious. Prohibition is just another way to oppress young, poor, mostly minority Americans in our country who have few opportunities besides minimum wage dead-end jobs or selling drugs for a hearty profit.

The point, however, is that the war on drugs is not able to be won without sacrificing all of our rights. The point is, we spend close to $100 billion annually on this war now, and drugs are becoming cheaper and more easy to get at the same time (both heroin and cocaine, the two substances that are the most dangerous). The point is that more than half of all drug arrests are for marijuana, a substance that is relatively safe compared to alcohol and caffeine (if only deaths and health complications are considered).

Black males receive longer sentences and have higher recidivism rates. We now have more than 2.1 million people living in cages. These percentages of children have a parent in prison.

I just don't see your point of how drugs are a scourge. Few people use cocaine. Three percent of children have a parent in prison.

We need to end marijuana prohibition, and we need to be critical of what we hear. It is crucial that we have objective coverage as the November election creeps up on us. I know that there is going to be a lot of coverage in the Future. The thing that worries me is that the coverage is going to be biased and overwhelmingly biased.

As adults, we cannot just have people tell us what to think. We have to formulate our own opinions. Since most college students are very naive and not critical enough, they take what they hear as fact. As adults we are going to make a lot of political decisions in Life and we have to be critical about it. So, why not teach us when we are young how to make these decisions.

"..."so I understand how liberal the Future is and I do not want its agenda interfering with the truth. Let students know where to go to find the answers. Let students know that CNN is where you can find liberal coverage and FOX News is where they can find conservative coverage. In fact, make a list of places where unbiased news can be found, if anywhere. We are all adults and we need to act like them. The truth is what we need and we need to be critical of what we hear. Then, and only then, can we make the right decisions.

"..."I suggest that the Future needs objective coverage in the Future. As for Reagan installing dictators in Central America, Van Vorhees is dreaming if trying to justify that. Perhaps someone else bought that it was a necessary evil, but I see the Communist threat in Russia as a reason for military spending.

Although he doesn't question people's pride in our government expanding by invading and taking over small Third World countries and being able to manipulate their elections to circumvent the will of the people there. And the people in Iraq have just been invaded! I don't see how we can call them terrorists. Perhaps if the British had won when the founding fathers were fighting for independence, they would be called terrorists today. Usually these businesses that play on people's fears is a great tactic of propaganda. I don't think college students are buying it.
