North Korea hesitates with treaty

In an agreement Monday, North Korea agreed to aban- don its program to develop a nuclear weapon. The agreement also included North Korea's acceptance of international inspection. But some experts say that North Korea may still be trying to negotiate other terms that would allow it to continue its nuclear program. The North Korean government has also expressed concerns about the United States' intentions to use force in any future conflict. As a result, many experts believe that the agreement may not be a final step towards a peaceful resolution of the nuclear crisis.

As reported by the Financial Times, the United States confirmed that it had no "nuclear weapons on the peninsula or any intention of developing nuclear weapons," but North Korea has not officially acknowledged these statements. President Bush reacted cautiously, asserting that the agreement was not yet signed.

"Now there's a way forward, and part of the way forward is for the North Koreans to understand we're serious about this and that we expect them to participate in a verifiable process," he said after a Cabinet meeting.

"Some of the nuclear-weapons-capable countries like India, Pakistan, Israel, and Iran have not been part of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty," he said.

North Korea came to its conclusion after its leaders agreed to offer international inspections and consider development of a new light water reactor for economic reasons to provide electricity.

"Costing more than $5 to $10 billion and taking nearly a decade to build, there is ongoing concern that a small government will follow up with the agreement," according to U.S. senators.

According to the Financial Times, the United States believes that the agreement is not a threat to the United States, but a promise of good faith to the international community.

The U.S. government feels that the United States will view the agreement as a potential way to stop North Korea's nuclear program, but the North Korean government has not provided any details about the terms of the agreement. The U.S. government has also stated that the agreement must be monitored by the international community to ensure its implementation. As of now, the United States is considering a new round of talks with North Korea to discuss the terms of the agreement.

Student activists’ message to Bush: ‘We want out of Iraq’ we ended up having 40 people signed up to go,” Kawalski said. Each member is paying $20 to participate.

“We join the many congressional groups from all over the United States that have been writing bills calling for various options for Iraq including immediate withdrawal, and dates and plans to demolish permanent U.S. military presence in Iraq,” Kawalski said. “Unfortunately, the power lies in the hands of President Bush.”

From the time the war began in March 2003 until Sept. 21, 2003, the U.S. has suffered 1197 deaths and 3283 wounded soldiers, according to the Iraq Veterans Project.

Iraq was a bad idea in the first place,” Kawalski said. “There were no weapons of mass destruction, there were no connections between Iraq and al-Qaeda, and the Iraqi government given to enter Iraq has been proven false.”

Kowalski is not alone in her opinions against the war. In May, she received an e-mail from the United for Peace and Justice Association about the protest, and members of Campus Peace Action soon started planning their trip to the nation’s capital.

The organization made a case in front of the White House, and the senators voted unanimously to allocate $200,000 for the journey. The money was used for hotel rooms and part of the transportation costs.

Campus Peace Action hopes to get to Washington, D.C., by early Saturday morning. At 10 a.m., that day, speakers from other peace organizations will rally and begin the march to the White House.

“The march will be the best part because it is going to be so many people walking for one cause,” Kawalski said. “Bush will be just hearing from Gainesville, Tallahassee, Miami and even South Florida.

“We are going to tell Bush that we’ve had enough. Kowalski said, “It’s not just “We want out of Iraq.”

In the hours leading up to his death, Richard O'Bryant, 39, a former student newspaper advisor and former employee at the paper that his co-workers and friends said best described him as an excellent reporter and a great person,

\"Our campus is unique because we care a lot about each other,\" he wrote. \"We care of each other. This is not a series of rules and regulations. This is a family.\"

\"He's going to be missed,\" Strupp said. \"He was one of the most amazing journalists I've ever seen. We have good memories of him and the lessons he taught us. We\'ll prevail through this.\"

"I usually can't call my mom or a friend to make a decision for me any more," said Alissa Austin, "and I know that's a luxury." As Austin plans for her return to the Peace Corps, she still misses her family and friends, and the pressure of making big decisions has yet to fade. "I'm excited to be back," she said, "but I'm also a little bit anxious about it." For Austin, the decision to return to the Peace Corps was not an easy one, but it was the right one for her. She has been working hard to improve her Spanish skills, and she is excited to return to the Peace Corps to help others.

two weeks have passed since the government's public relations team has been on the job and we've seen a slight decline in the images of dead bodies being flown into New Orleans. The government has learned the hard way that there's a sign of respect and dignity for those whose deaths are due to Hurricane Katrina.

However, the act of denying has turned into a justification for violence. The police have begun to threaten civilians who are looking to make the city more transparent by releasing records about the bodies that are being flown into the area. They are armed with automatic weapons and are trying to keep journalists away from the bodies in order to prevent any further questioning or examinations of what is being done.

That officer was threatened by the media, but there are many more officers and soldiers who are openly engaging in this illegal behavior. The American public needs to be aware of these actions and hold the government responsible for their behavior.

The government has been unable to come to a decision on the bodies being flown into the area. They have been forced to rely on the media to come up with a solution. The media has been forced to take the lead in this situation.

True cowardice is throwing journalistic integrity away

Two years ago, our men's basketball team made an improbable run, winning the Atlantic Sun championship and earning a bid to the NCAA Tournament. During that season, we wrote plenty of columns taking shots at Stetson basketball, but the night the Bulls agreed to play us in football up until the last game, I told the editor that I would be sending a photo of myself dressed in UCF attire. Howev­er, the editor jumped the gun and felt like slashing his ethics down the toilet instead to make himself look like a big­ger man than I. If a person needs to attack and insult me personally to make himself seem better, then who am I to stop him? If someone wants to behave like a child, then I'm not going to take the time out of my life to concern myself with it.

The fact that I've even written this column must be put­ting a smile on his face. Good, I'm glad I can make people happy.

I've taken shots at celebr­ities and athletes because they're fair game and they've done something to deserve it.

The editor of the Oracle has taken shots at me on a number of occasions and it has all been completely unwarranted.

I once told him in an e-mail that I was flattered by his lack of creativity when he took one of my columns and broke it down to insult my writing ability and to compensate for his lack of an original idea (see the Oracle editor's Feb. 10 column "The Oracle of the Sports Columnist"). I'm still flattered that someone would be so desperate for an ego boot that he would insult me and manipulate my words, but I'm saddened by it at the same time.

It doesn't pain me because it's an attack at me. It pains me because it destroys the credi­bility of a college journalist that I once had respect for.

People often consider me and this newspaper for certain things, but they can trust us to remain within the realm of proper journalistic ethics. Granted we've slipped here or there, but never to a level as pathetic as what was done at the Oracle.

If personal attacks are what make news at the Oracle, then it's a shame.

When ethics are lost all we have left is trash. I really hope the Oracle takes this kind of behavior out of the column.

to anyone personally, it's simply generating a few base and poking fun. It's harmless.

But someone took it too seriously after the UCF loss to USF. The editor-in-chief of the USF Oracle pushed profes­sionals and journalistic ethics aside and decided to run personal attacks and insults towards me.

In Monday's issue of the Oracle, I was called a coward. I was quoted as saying that I basically ran from the game because UCF was losing. He was right - I did say those things.

However, the fact that I was laughing while I said it was nowhere included in the col­umn and that I told the editor that I left because I had a certain newspaper to start working on it. In the next day was missing from his recount of our conversation as well.

Worst of all was the process in which I was quoted for this column. My post-game phone conversation with the editor was published without my consent and I was quoted entirely out of context.

The editor also said I "woofed on a box." I told the editor that I would be sending him a column apologizing to USF for my light­hearted insults and a photo of myself dressed in USF attire. However, the editor jumped the gun and felt like slashing his ethics down the toilet instead to make himself look like a big­ger man than I.

Volleyball team to help in Katrina relief

For New Orleans natives Colado and Randazzo, Hurricane Katrina is personal

ANDY VASQUEZ / Staff Writer

For most Americans, Hurricane Katrina was a tragedy that affected them from a distance. Most people saw the shocking images on television and watched as gas prices went up. For two members of the UCF volleyball family, however, Katrina's impact was personal.

UCF volleyball Coach Meg Colado and freshman libero Lindsey Randazzo are both New Orleans natives and both of their lives and the lives of their families have been deeply affected by the devastating storm. That's why the UCF volleyball team has decided to do whatever they can to help out with the Hurricane Katrina relief effort.

When the Knights face New Mexico State this Saturday in their first home match of the season, the cost of attendance will be free. The team asks that the fans bring donations of money, canned goods or clothing to donate to the victims of Hurricane Katrina. The team will also be outside the Citrus Bowl before Saturday's UCF football game collecting donations, and they will continue to take donations throughout the season at their home matches.

"The players are very willing and excited to help," Colado said. "We all understand that it's a person­al cause for two of us." The last four weeks have been filled with much uncertainty for Colado and Randazzo.

Randazzo, who plans on playing in athletic training, is from downtown New Orleans. When she first heard that Hurricane Katrina was headed for New Orleans, Randazzo was "shocked and scared."

"We've always had scars, but usually [the hurricanes] didn't last as long," she said.

Randazzo said that at first she told her parents to stay, because there wasn't any point in driving for 12 hours for no reason. Once she realized that the storm had become a Category 5 headed right for New Orleans, she realized how serious the situation was.

"The last word I got was that my family is OK with me so I'm not too worried," Randazzo said.

Colada was raised by a single mother and has siblings living in downtown New Orleans. When she first heard the news of the hurricane, Colada was devastated.

"I'm seriously worried about my family. Our house is still standing," Colada said.

Colada's mother is in the medical field and her brother works for the Red Cross. "This storm will have a negative impact on my family's careers," she said.

IT'S BACK TO WORK (30) is looking at the first of Saturday's losses in the loss. If the Knights hope to compete against Marshall they will have to stop the run and do a better job of covering the ball on offense.

KNIGHTS READY FOR C-USA OPPONENT, LOOK TO MOVE ON FROM LOSS

ANDY VASQUEZ / Staff Writer

After a surprising and disheartening blowout loss to USF last Saturday, the Knights returned home to take on Marshall in their opener of the Conference USA season against Marshall this Saturday at the Citrus Bowl.

"As a head coach, the buck is always on my shoulders," Knights head coach ANDY RANDAZZO said to the media on Tuesday. "As a head coach, the buck stops with me and you're always searching for answers. Football's a game of blocking and tackling, and we weren't very good at either of them Saturday." The answer will have to come quick for the Knights, as they open up their Conference USA season against Marshall this Saturday at the Citrus Bowl.

KNIGHTS WILL HAVE TO STOP THE RUN IF THEY HOPE TO BEAT OLD RIVAL

CHRIS MCKNIGHT / Staff Writer

The Knights can't afford to sit back and reflect on their loss to South Florida, as Conference USA play begins Saturday against old MAC rival Marshall.

"We need to be able to stop the run," Knights head coach ANDY RANDAZZO said on Monday afternoon.

"We have a lot of young guys that need to learn how to tackle," Randazzo said.

"We need to play faster, more intense."

Randazzo said that the Knights need to be able to stop the run if they hope to beat old rival Marshall.

Randazzo also said that the Knights need to be able to stop the run if they hope to beat old rival Marshall.

"The fans definitely want to stay close to their team," Randazzo said.

Marshall leads the all-time series 3-0, they beat the Knights 20-3 last year

As the Knights prepare to take on Marshall on Saturday, they will be looking to turn the page on their 7-6 loss to USF last week.

With a 3-0 record, Marshall comes into the game looking for their first C-USA victory of the season.

Soccer hoping to recover from goal drought

Men can't find the net in back-to-back losses

BRIAN MURPHY / Staff Writer

After the Knights soccer team kicked off the year with a perfect start, they were brought back to earth with a 3-0 loss to the Bulls last Saturday.

The UCF soccer team suffered its second heartbreaking loss in three days, by USF Saturday at the Addy Classic on the last day of the Addy Classic.

Much like their Friday loss against Davidson, the Knights were outplayed by the Bulls from start to finish. The Knights had eight more shots and held an 8-0 advantage in corner kicks over the Pride.

"We just can't find the goals to give them a chance for victory," Marshall coach Mike Bobo said.

Women fall to Florida, streak now at four games

NATHAN PODERT / Staff Writer

Scoring droughts often seem inevitable at one point or another for every team's season. The UCF women's soccer team is no exception. The Knights have lost their last four games and are 2-0-2 on the season.

Though the Knights played a solid match against Loyola (Maryland) and UW-Milwaukee, they were outplayed by Hofstra University and Hofstra women's soccer team in their last two games.

The Knights were out of sorts in these contests. Their most recent loss was a 2-0 decision to the Florida Gators on Sunday afternoon.

"Sometimes you go through a dry spell and this is one of those times we need to find the back of the net," Randazzo said. "This game was much better than the last few games, and we played with more intensity." The Knights used solid defense and UW-Milwaukee defense, the Knights played with an untimely goal by Hofstra's Christina Krol.

"We're still trying to get our offense going," Randazzo said.

Volleyball set to open up USA Conference play

Knights travel to Dallas for match with Mustangs

ANNA JACOBSIN

Texas

The UCF volleyball team will be the first-ever UCF program to compete in a Conference USA conference game this Friday.

The game, set for 8 p.m. EST., Friday, will be against Southern Methodist University.

This will be the Knights’ sixth consecutive road match after Hurricane Rita caused the postponement of the Knights’ scheduled home opener against Florida Atlantic University on Tuesday. A re-scheduled date and time has not been announced.

The match against SMU marks the first in a long stretch of matches against C-USA teams for the Knights. UCF’s next 15 matches will be against new conference foes.

As of last Friday, the SMU Mustangs fell to 5-8 after losing to the University of California Riverside in three games during the Hawaiano Salads Titan Invitational in Fullerton, Calif.

Mustang freshman Natalie Weiss made the All-Tournament team after tallying seven kills and three blocks during the loss to Riverside.

The team remains at 3-5-6 this season after losing to the University of South Florida on Friday. The Knights will play their first home game this Sunday when they take on Tulsa, but the team won’t only return to the home court until next week. Since Stetson Live is set to take place in the UCF Arena this Sunday, the volleyball team will play its game in the Education Center.

Though admission for the match is free, the team asks that fans bring a donation of goods or clothes. The Knights are attempting to accept donations at all home games this year. All donations will be outside the Citrus Bowl during charity collections before the UCF-Mackay football game on Saturday.

family was going to stay in a hotel in New Orleans,” Randazzo said. “They had already set up several floors to avoid the flooding.”

The next few days were a blur for Randazzo, who at the time didn’t have a working television or radio to get updates on the storm. Adding to Randazzo’s stress was the fact her home sits in front of a levee.

“I didn’t know why my family was for four days,” Randazzo said. “Two or three days after the storm hit, I was looking around and eventually it would and they get back to it and let the know they were okay.”

Over the next few days, Randazzo said that her friends and extended family were calling to see if they heard that members of that family’s last home had been flooded. Because of that she feels very differently about her home now.

Throughout the uncertainty, Randazzo stayed focused on volleyball.

“ ‘She’s been tremendous,’” Colado said. “ ‘She hasn’t let it affect one practice or one match.’”

Was incredibly. While being a faithful follower, it’s really a huge sign of her character.

Amidst Randazzo’s family home was not flooded in the storm, as the levee near her did not flood. However, several homes were flooded and a house that they need to build was flooded.

That storm was taken by the storm. The building showed the Randazzo family home. However, it was flooded and now they have to start over.

Her mother, brother, sister, aunt, two sons and her dog are all2004 Florida Atlantic University. "I feel very lucky," Randazzo said. "At the same time I feel within it, because I have friends that have lost everything. Houses two blocks down from us were wiped out."

"I feel very lucky," Randazzo said. "As a team, I feel that the team was so supportive," Randazzo said. "I couldn’t have asked for anything else because they were so there for me.

The fact that her coach was going through a similar experience also helped Randazzo through the tough time. "I really helped for a moment, but to know someone going through the same was great."

Colado had a chance to go back to New Orleans on Monday and Tuesday to see what had happened. Remarkably the Colado family escaped any major damage as well.

Colado’s mother said he said "It looks like a ghost town everywhere." He had seen New Orleans look too devastated. "We used to live here, but it looks like a bomb went off."

Colado then saw Lea get into assistant of both her home and Randazzo’s home later that same day.

"I don’t think anybody could have done more. The house up front from Randazzo’s home was wiped out," Colado said. "But I think the girls have really understood."

Randazzo’s family home was just supported of both her and Randazzo’s.

"We will be going home this weekend and I feel very much."

Everyone on the team was so pleased. "I couldn’t have asked for anything else because they were so there for me."

UCF maintained consistent offensive pressure throughout the first half but were unable to avoid a defensive lapse early in the game. At G5, Ginger Cherry Pickman won a point against Adena Abdalla, who sent a shot past Knights’ assistant coach Darlene Goodwin with four shots on goal.

Following the early goal G6, the Knight’s defense only allowed one more shot on goal in the first half. Unfortunately, it resulted in another UCF goal. Abdalla sent a corner kick to the outside post and Gators forward Amanda Frangis managed to get her way in the path of players to grab position and home the ball on the second goal. Abdalla’s first half goal contained offensive flurry from shots on both teams. The Gators led 6-0 overall.

UCF, however, created more offensive chances, firing five shots on goal, including one on net from the UCF’s two. The Knights, unfortunately, could not find the back of the net as Goodwin played consistently and aggressively throughout the entire match.

Goodwin ended the day with 25 saves. However, while Abril had only two saves on the day. Goodwin is an average 1.333 save percentage and a goals against average of 2.32.

The Golden Knights gear up for the first time since the storm.

Randazzo, at practice last month, has stood out as a key player through her injured foot.

The senior setter has been limited to playing only when she was able to stand up. Sunday night was the first time since the storm that she could play in a game.

"I was out for a couple of games after the storm," Randazzo said. "I felt very bad for everyone else because they have been really underprivileged. That is the reason why I was out.

Randazzo throughout the ordeal. "Like I was talking to the players and they looked like they were just lost.

Randazzo went on to say that she was able to help them.

"I felt so fortunate to see my money in Randazzo,” Randazzo said. "And then when I realized that I could be helping a family."

The Golden Knights play at Marshall on Tuesday night.

Former A-Sun rival Owls set to take on Knights tonight

By CHRISS MORELLO

One of the most exciting tournaments of the year is upon us. Intramural sports will send this year's co-rec flag football champion to represent Florida Atlantic (2-0) when they renew the old Atlantic Sun rivalry.

Despite their subpar record, the Owls have been crushing the competition lately. Anders Granstad and freshman forward Javier Carillo. Last week against Xavier and Alabama A&M, Granstad posted back-to-back shutouts and Carillo knocked in five goals.

Erwin also mentioned how he attributed the loss in part to a bit more effort on his part.

Atlantic City (3-0) when they renew their rivalry. The Knights will have to deal with the current A-Sun Players of the Week, senior goalkeeper Anders Granstad and freshman forward Javier Carillo. Last weekend against Xavier and Alabama A&M, Granstad posted back-to-back shutouts and Carillo knocked in five goals.

While Erwin thought the team needed a bit more effort, he said, "We just need to make it happen. We are trying to let it happen instead of going out and making it happen."

Erwin said "We didn't score. You have the ball, we get the ball,' we said. 'We just need to make it happen. We have a very small need to say, 'hey, I am going to get the ball.' We have a very small need to say, 'hey, I am going to get the ball.'"

UPCOMING RELEASE:
TIM BURTON'S CORPSE BRIDE

What if marital fidelity extended beyond the grave? Tim Burton's Corpse Bride probes age-old question of...

T'IL DEATH
DO YOU PART?

WILLIAM GOSS

Twelve years after producing The Nightmare Before Christmas, director Tim Burton returns with his latest foray in stop-motion animation, Corpse Bride. What results is a triumph of Burton's indelible style over substance, but only by a small margin.

Victor (Johnny Depp) is a timid young man, soon to be married off by his parents to the equally shy Victoria (Emily Watson), whom he has never met before.

Though Victor and Victoria hit it off during a brief encounter prior to their wedding rehearsal, he falls to properly rectify his vows, and is dismissed by the pastor to go over them outside.

In the nearby woods, Victor overhears his vows and places the ring on a branch. The branch turns out to actually be the finger of the Corpse Bride (voiced by Helena Bonham Carter), much to her delight and his dismay. Victor must then decide if he wants to join the Corpse Bride in the under-world or if he still wishes to marry Victoria in the living realm.

As expected, Burton once again tackles a tale of the marvulously macabre with his consistent sense of whimsy. The partnerships animation pays off in surprising fluid motion, and each environment reflects his tendencies for the ghoulishly grotesque.

The land of the Dead is dripped in bleak shades of grey, while the land of the Dead is a lively, lurid realm. In contrast, it is often implied that the characters are better off dead (Corpse Bride only seems to reinforce this notion, which Burton previously tackled in Beetlejuice and Nightmare).

The story is linear and predictable, though it forevercourts our welcome (the film itself runs a brisk 75 minutes).

The UCF Conservatory Theater kicks off its main campus season today with Neil Simon's Broadway comedy, Proposals. With our broken engagement, two love triangles and a handful of unexpected hindrances, it's an afternoon you won't want to miss.

"It's a great way to start off the season because it has so many universal themes," said cast member Randy Shanahan.

The story is told by Clemenza, the Hines family's black, Cima married in August, 1964. Bill Hiles, loving father and seven-year-old, spends every summer at his dying father, and pro golfer from New York, running for his first semester on campus season today with Neil Simon's Broadway comedy about a broken engagement and love triangles.

Proposals kicks off UCF Theatre season

Josie, with him. Kenny, eager to flaunt his misery in front of air-headed model girlfriend, pining for her after their secret romance ended last summer. Josie is Ray's estranged heartlessness, as Kenny is now suicidal. Another motivation for coming to scold Josie for her heartless, he's also seven years ago, stops by too.

"What Kenny finds out, however, is that Ray has another motivation for coming to see Josie—she's also going for her after their secret romance ended last summer."

Josie's friend, Vinnie, a young mobster from Miami Beach, invites himself. Annie, suddenly flies in from Paris just to see him. And as if that weren't enough,Vinnie has an encore. Amanda Stephens as Clemma chastises Michael Navarro in a scene from the UCF Conservatory Theatre's performance of Proposals.

Corps Brililiantly animated, but lacking in heart and soul

Pruett said.

"They had a more unique obstacle to a stage. The acting is their specialty, and they deserve praise.

"What made you do that to your head?" This is more opening lines! Really! I was shocked. I know it looks kinda funny, but wow. Move along, kids.

"Tsk, tsk girl, you're fine! Just because I look like I am 13, does not mean we are in the eighth grade. I can believe people still use this phone. It's bad. Bad, bad, bad.

"You remind me of my daughter," Boren Old, scenery, may present take note. Do not say this to any woman. For that matter, just don't talk to us.

"Does your daddy know you're here with us?" I swear I could not make this stuff up. Who would you bring up your father? Eww! I was so baffled! I walked away. He was lucky he didn't try to continue talking to me.

2. "Oh, you gave me something to hold on to!" I love that guy who said this to me, so I got it to a market read. But anyone else and I would have flipped. What makes you think I did this for you?

3. The No. 1 thing I heard? "Nice handlebars." They just said that.

The animation for the film was highly praised.

Although visually captivating from beginning to end, Tim Burton’s Corpse Bride manages to leave behind a cold, hollow feeling with the viewer.

Because, this role of a young man and the ghost next door carries a morbid charm and whimsical nature that is capable of winning over most any cynic.

Tugging at the ‘tails always a no-go

The characters are adequate, the puns are frequent and the animations are tolerable, if completely unnecessary.

The biggest problem with Corpse Bride is, like the character, has six hats.

Depths Victor is a weak protagonist to pull the film, and the focus falls on the Corpse Bride, whose rushed back story proves to be the sole source of sympathy on her behalf. The other characters and their emotional stakes and transitions with the show as audience, they deserve all of the students put example of the hard work that been.

Ronald Tim Burton wrote with the character for Tim Burton’s Corpse Bride. The animation for the film was highly praised.

The art direction alone is destined for awards glory, and don’t expect much surprise from this end if the film ends up taking home the Best Animated Feature Oscar next spring.

 Role of black maid a challenge for student

He joined the Theatre Conservatory as an adjunct instructor this year, and he’s currently teaching acting this term.

"We’re trying to set the bar really high, so hopefully after we leave we have something to shout for and hang up in the dust," Boren said.

Most of the cast is fairly new to the stage, but Toby S. Pruett, who plays Burt, is more experienced. Check out the National Shakespeare Conservatory in New York before coming to UCF to pursue his master’s degree.

Of the UCF students’ performance, Pruett says he has been "very pleasantly surprised."

\"This show is a prime example of the hard work that all of the students put into it,\" Pruett said. "They deserve an audience, they deserve praise.

Most of the cast listed their challenges with the show as the "small ones" — adapting theatrical mannerisms, absorbing dialects, conveying emotional stakes and transitions from a subsequential point to a stage.

One cast member, however, had a more unique obstacle to overcome.

"It was a challenge to go back in time, and to accept a position of servitude," Atlantia Stephenson, the actress who played Gemima, said.

Boren added that when
