Senate elections yield HPA run-off

Voter turnout hits an unsettling low this semester

MARC JUSTE

In a startling contrast to last year’s SGA Senate election, only two candidates, Sean Whitaker and Jan Medola, will compete in this week’s run-off election.

The Senate hopes to compensate for the two-runoff election by winning the two highest percentages of the vote in the initial election between five candidates.

Overwhelming this year's election is what many say there is an alarming lack of interest in campus politics. This lack of interest is reflected in the unusually low number of candidates and even the even lower-than-average voter turnout of the student body.

Candidate Jan Medola was not surprised by the outcome.

Medola's opponent, however, spoke strongly about the need for political action as well as why he hopes to become a part of the 30th Senate this week.

"I don’t think I’m the only one on campus. I don’t understand the lack of political action," Fresenheim Nicole Bamberlki said.

Freshman Nicole Bamberlki is passionate about the cause of student involvement and encouraging the UCF community to take an interest.

Bamberlki, who was recently selected as a member of the Student Body President's Advisory Council, said there was more to gaining involved than the non-prototypical panning found in books read at the beginning of the school year.

Bamberlki uses her experiences volunteering at SIGA A Knight for Relief as an example.

"We met a lot of wholesome people who are all here to help the people who need to be helped. They wanted to do something productive,

She also said students need to be involved and encourage even if only by voting in elections.

"The most important decisions that affect the entire school," Bamberlki said. "The $1.6 million they are in charge of is a lot of money, and students should be involved with how it is spent.

"I believe that the student body is equally frustrated by the circumstances of this year's Senate elections and said the fact that, as a student, you’re not able to vote, is hard to get your point across.

"Despite the low interest, there have been many campaigns planned and hopes..."

WILLIAM E. GARLEY, JR.

I have a red, irritated eye. What should I do?

For all cases of red, irritated eyes, please seek immediate medical attention.

Red, irritated eyes can be a result of many possibilities.

The most common problem is conjunctivitis. The signs and symptoms of conjunctivitis are a red, irritated eye; a gritty sensation; discharge from the affected eye; eyelid itching — usually more noticeable in the mornings — and eyelid swelling.

Sometimes there is no change in the visual acuity, so there is no blurred or double vision. There can be various types of conjunctivitis, including bacterial or viral, to irritation caused by contact lenses. The most dangerous of the bacterial types of conjunctivitis is pneumococcal. This can lead to corneal ulcers, scarring and eventual blindness. This must be treated within 24 hours if at all possible.

The most common type of conjunctivitis is viral, typically due to an adenovirus infection. It is frequently associated with a recent upper respiratory illness or exposure to another person with a red eye.

Contact lens conjunctivitis is the most threatening cause of a red eye. It may be due to chemical irritation or hypersensitivity from preservatives. This is easily treated with topical antibiotics.

In preparing the cause of red eyes, consider the onset of the inflammation; the environment; work-related exposure; daily personal care, medications or cosmetics, systemic disease and exposure to ill friends, relatives, coworkers and sexual partners. It is also important to tell the doctor about any eye injuries.

On occasion, laboratory studies might be necessary, such as eye cultures or blood work.

Other possibilities in the differential diagnosis of conjunctivitis include a condition known as dry eye, corneal abrasions or glaucoma.

Treatment of conjunctivitis includes removing discharge from the eye by using warm or cool compresses.

Topical and/or oral antibiotics may be prescribed.

Patients are encouraged to avoid eye scratching and limit the amount of time with contact lenses.

Changes in personal hygiene are strongly encouraged to help prevent further spreading of the condition to other people. Through, frequent hand washing, using separate towels and washcloths, changing pillowcases frequently and cleaning doorknobs, countertops and computer keyboards are highly recommend.

Follow-up evaluations for all cases of conjunctivitis are necessary. Typically, a follow-up appointment is encouraged five to seven days after the initial evaluation.

If you or someone you know has a red eye, please see your doctor.

Whitaker, Walker form fresh majority

This week, Whitaker hopes to be the next "utilizing my supporters, who have already pledged their help for this week's election." One method employed by Whitaker and his fraternity brothers was the use of SGA-approved online Facebook groups to recruit support.

The use of Facebook groups was a new trend this year and led to the election's only serious violations when some candidates did not have their groups approved by SGA. Senate adviser Chris Coffey filled in as an election adviser when Shane Justesen took a leave of absence for the birth of his first son.

Coffey said that, although the work is not as close as with Chief Elections Commissioner Leah Walker, she was "very happy with the organization and professionalization of all the election commissioners".

If his online Facebook group and other campaign efforts are a success, Whitaker has defined an agenda for his term as a professionalism of his election.

"I plan to make an impact as soon as possible," he said. "I want to try and understand where the interest in campus politics has gone.

Police need more training

To the family, friends and colleagues of Officer Martin Jenkins, I offer my most heartfelt condolences on your loss.

This does not mean that we need to change the kind of training police receive. After all, the public is quite aware of the flaws in police training.

It is a sad fact that we are the people who represent us in the eyes of the four-year degrees and more, but the people we have who carry weapons that possess us on a more personal and local level only need a few months of this kind of training. Goza article missed the mark

After reading last week's article regarding the Goza picket line, I was appalled to see that the author (yes, I previously had much respect for the facts, as I felt the article was well researched, and I enjoyed the way it was written) had officially pulled all Jews out of Goza.

The article further implies that Israeli settlements and forces remain within the Gaza region, explaining that "the Palestinian government must control its terror factions before Israel will cease control of Gaza" and that Hamas "wants to pull out of all of Gaza." But the fact is, there is not a single Israeli left in the Gaza strip. CNN reported on Aug. 23 that the Israeli military had officially completed pulling all Jews out of Gaza.

Another paragraph discusses "difficult Israeli checkpoints" and Palestinians living in a legal predicament. Simply stated, those are matters of opinion and should have no place in a news piece. It is quite obvious that, if we research what the article is about, I hope that the future takes better care in the future and reports on such subjects with tact and appreciation for the facts. It would be extremely disappointing to find the facts in the future, being subject to such misinformation as has been witnessed here.

No, it's just the UCF campus. Any student or

All file sharing is not equal

In response to your editorial on file sharing,
I would like to say that not all music being shared comes from companies who des-iriously steal your money. And while the ecosystem that is owned by established record companies, there is a lot of demand for music of all types and deserves to find a home on your hard drive.

For instance, I used Napster a few months ago to download the album "Hieroglyphics" of the record company Divine/Empire. I purchased the album on eBay to buy it, the only way to get those songs is to download them. A lot of music is only released on vinyl, and file-sharing is the only way to get the record.

A lot of underground bands make their money on tour, not from selling records in stores.
And I haven't heard of Levit Planet, Bionic Empire or Hyperbeast records getting their records online. We all file sharing is created equal, and if you don't believe me, go out and try to find the
