Belly dancing club assists families with Special hopes

VENESSA FERNANDEZ

Shimmie Knights, presented the Enchanted Twilight Belly Dancing flash mob. "I decided to start this club because of my love for belly dancing," Jonathan Earnest, a student orientation coordinator, will spend this week reflecting on the history of UCF’s orientation program for new students whilst at the same time working to build its future.

"It’s an awesome experience," Earnest said of U-Chore, which has extended its application deadline to 5 p.m. Friday. "It’s life changing — you make lifelong friends, you get to know all the incoming students, it’s just an awesome opportunity!"

On the same day applications for the 2006 O-Team are due, Earnest, who served as an O-Teamer before becoming a student coordinator, will honor Jimmy A. Ferrell, the man who brought the unique orientation program to UCF.

"It depicted a beautiful scene - three women dressed in belly dancing costumes in front of a large window, while the sun was setting," Jordan Herrera, a senior Staff Writer for the Student Government Association, said. "The dedication ceremony will take place tomorrow at 4 p.m., following the Student Government Association's meeting in the Student Union."

"I want to give an opportunity for everyone to showcase their talents," said Raissa El-Fary, one of the event organizers. "We wanted to feature all the styles of belly dancing."

Performers included UCF students, the Orlando Dance Theatre, the Orlando Ballet and Troupe Amaloun.

"They played a combination of hip-hop, pop and R&B," Ashley Green, a DJ playing at the event, said.

"Do you smell what the Knights are squaring up to?" Jonathan Earnest, a student orientation coordinator, said. "It depicted Knightro grilling hot dogs on Greek Street, with UCF students around him, enjoying the music and the atmosphere."

"It was a huge success," Earnest said. "It brought a lot of attention to our Representations program, and helped to promote the upcoming Student Government elections."
Education act has some at UCF worried

ACCORDING TO A new study by the U.S. Department of Transportation, about 30% of drivers involved in crashes have been detected by a roadside test to have a blood alcohol concentration of at least 0.08%. That is the legal limit in most states for driving under the influence.

The study also found that drivers with a blood alcohol concentration of 0.10% or higher were involved in a higher percentage of crashes than those with a concentration of 0.08% or lower. The study suggests that interventions to reduce alcohol-impaired driving should target those with higher blood alcohol concentrations.

The study was conducted by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and involved data from over 4 million crashes in the United States between 2005 and 2014.

Allen W. Schaeffer, president and CEO of the Auto Dealers Association of America, said the study is a wake-up call for drivers who may be consuming alcohol and then getting behind the wheel.

"This study underscores the severity of the problem of impaired driving and the importance of continued efforts to reduce it," Schaeffer said. "We encourage drivers to make responsible choices and avoid driving under the influence of alcohol.

A new law in California requires drivers with multiple drunk driving convictions to install an ignition interlock device in their vehicles. The device prevents the car from starting until the driver passes a breath test.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration is also working on a rule to require all new cars to be equipped with such devices. The rule would go into effect in 2023.

In the meantime, drivers are encouraged to avoid drinking and driving. Those who have been convicted of drunk driving should also avoid getting behind the wheel after consuming alcohol.

If you suspect someone is impaired, call 911 or report the driver to the police. It's always better to err on the side of caution and ensure everyone's safety on the road.

Four-year-old event gives students chance to vote on favorite window decorations

For nearly a year the journalism division faculty at the Nicholson School of Communica-tion has been brainstorming and developing ways to improve the journalism program. Now their hard work has paid off.

In fall 2006, the journalism division faculty had the opportunity to introduce new tracks into its curriculum: reporting, writing, visual-ization and editing.

At last spring’s meeting of the Undergraduate Policy and Curricu-lum Committee, which reviews all requests for course changes, the journalism faculty presented a proposal to add the new tracks and the committee unanimously approved the additions.

Felder said if everything goes well, the new tracks will be offered next fall.

When he and other faculty began to review the journalism program last year, Felder said they realized that it hadn’t been changed in 15 years and that the news industry as well as students’ interests were changing.

In the proposal he submitted to the UPCC, Felder wrote that the trend in the news industry is toward convergence, which is for all the media to become more alike and use new delivery systems such as the Internet.

“The new tracks will give students more flexibility,” Felder said. “We have to modernize our curriculum to better serve our students. It will motivate students to pursue, in more depth, what they really like.”

Under the current journalism curriculum, students are required to take courses in reporting, editing and photog-raphy and can choose only one elective.

The new tracks will allow students to focus on a specific area of journalism and choose up to three electives.

Dani Eagles, a UCF alum-num and now recruitment and staff development editor at the Orlando Sentinel, works closely with journalism faculty when they begin to discuss the program changes. He said he suggested the three new tracks based on what he thought the news industry valued and what students’ experiences with journalism students. He said the new curricu-lum will help students target their employers.

“Getting people involved through visual channels is important,” Eagles said. “In the past UCF hasn’t offered anything like that.”

The new tracks will not only diversify students majoring in the tracks they did not choose. In the proposal he wrote, Felder said, “Different media now work together. Increasingly newspapers own local television stations and also deliver the news online.”

The new curriculum will include Converged Journalism, a capstone course for seniors, in which students will produce an electronic version of a newspaper.

Jennifer Dillust, a journalism student at the University of South Florida at St. Petersburg, has won national award for her work at the St. Petersburg Times.

Although students will be required to choose a specific journalism track, they will not be required to graduate with a degree in journalism because they will still have the opportunity to graduate with a degree in journalism at UCF.

The updated program will give students more opportuni-ties, Felder said. Many students agree.

Senior journalism major Chalina Dillard will graduate before the new tracks will be offered. But she said that the curriculum will help meet students’ specialized interests and will probably help advance the school of communication.

“I think it’s a good idea,” said Dillard, who is also presi-dent of the UCF chapter of the Society of Professional Journal-ists. “It will make the school even more appealing for potential students.”

Jennifer Dillust, a journalism student and the president of ED 2000 Magazine Club at UCF said she likes the changes but thinks something is still missing.

“I wish our school would consider adding more magazine classes or making magazine journalism a track,” she said. “I know there is a lot of interest in magazine journalism at our school. We currently have more than 300 people on our club’s contact list.”

Although magazine journalism isn’t a track, Felder said journalism faculty decided to offer the three new tracks to move away from a “one-size-fits-all” curriculum.

“The goal is to be a better tool of helping students because our students’ interests vary,” he said. “The news industry is changing, so we want to keep up with the changes.”
Speakers spread awareness by drawing on past experiences

Women's Research Center explore creating formal group for breast cancer survivors to help create a support network.

NASHI RIGNER

Fish sandwiches and flowers dotted the white tablecloths, as a handful of breast cancer survivors shared stories, exchanged thoughts, and promoted advocacy with the audience of UCF's 3rd annual Breast Cancer Update on Fri.

"To survive cancer is a never-ending process," said Louise the keynote speaker and UCF School of Nursing director.

She and many other women pushed this by speaking openly about how they dealt with the diagnostic, treatments and living day-to-day with breast cancer.

"The biggest take-home message is that there is hope with breast cancer — that survivors lead exceptionally productive and enjoyable lives," School of Nursing professor Karen Henry said.

Dealing with breast cancer can be overwhelming, breast cancer survivor Lois Reppley said. She learned to "take it one step at a time."

"It's a very personal thing," said Shadigett, breast cancer survivor and UCF Women's Club member said, "And no two people handle it the same."

After finding out she had breast cancer, Shadigett said she refused to accept help from her friends and family. And she learned to "pause it along to others who need it."

During chemotherapy, many women go through periods of hair loss and other emotional fac tors, Shadigett said.

She and eight friends decided to have a wig-buying party. While they were trying on wigs, another woman came in the store with her baby son. Instantly, half of her friends rushed to the woman's side and encouraged her. Shadigett said.

"Today, another survivor, was truly a breast cancer survivor. She was diagnosed in 1976, when most breast cancer patients had only one option."

"Breast cancer is not a covert disease that one must hide," Lesser said. Instead, she said, she looked forward to going for her radiation treatment because she had the chance to talk with other breast cancer patients.

"Developing a support network also helps," Lesser said.

Many women, like survivor Trina Farrar, are finding strength through support groups. After being diagnosed, she decided to start a group with other women in her church.

No formal group has been formed at UCF yet, but Women's Research Center Director Leslie Lieberman said she and the Women's Club are looking into the idea. The group would be open to any student or faculty breast cancer survivors, she said.

Comeback win helps to validate Knights

THE EXTRA POINT
ANDY KROGZ

It's pretty hard to believe, but this is it. This is the year that the UCF football program begins to pull itself up off the ashes.

With their win over East Carolina this weekend, the Knights went a long way toward reaching what has been their goal since the beginning of the season: to make it to a bowl game.

But the fact that the Knights won this game wasn't the most important thing it was the way the won it that was most impressive.

It's too early to rate how important UCF's win over ECU was on Saturday, but here's what we know so far:

Everything the Knights have worked so hard for this season nearly came to a crashing halt on Saturday afternoon in Greenville, N.C., but it didn't.

If the Knights were going to have a major collapse this season, it would have happened against ECU.

Everything was going along just about perfectly for the Knights as they held a two-touchdown lead midway through the third quarter and then BOOM! One uncalled penalty put the Knights on their knees and the Pirates on the wheel. Suddenly a game that had seemed like a walk in the park prior to that had become an emotional roller coaster.

ECU did get two touchdowns and the Knights looked about ready to wilt the place.

But something happened that we haven't seen in the past from UCF football teams. They fought back and got the job done.

Steven Moffett had an afternoon to forget, but he bounced back and got the job done against ECU Monday.

The UCF defense was getting men on the second half, but when they needed a stop most, they closed the holes and took care of business.

A lot of questionable calls didn't go UCF's way, but when they could have been a little better for themselves, instead the Knights stepped up and made the plays.

This was such a big win for the Knights because they had every reason to fold, and UCF didn't play well on the road.

UCF can't come from behind on the road, and UCF can't put away an opponent when it matters most.

Wrong. Wrong and wrong again.

Volleyball team bounces back with two wins

Andy Jackson of the Daily Commercial

After losing eight straight matches the UCF volleyball team had to win two in a row in a late-season road trip.

Both trips in the season the Knights played Alabama-Birmingham, the team they lost to twice in four games, and the second in three-straight Friday night (30-30, 30-30, 30-24).

After the wins, the Knights improved to 10-9 overall and 4-8 in C-USA.

UCF has consistently relied in the middle of the conference standings with a record of 10-9 and 4-6 in C-USA.

The Knights had a total hitting percentage of .309 for all three games, including a team-high hitting percentage of .417 in the third game.

Contributing to the high hitting percentage was sophomore outside hitter Loreta Lakan. She had four double-doubles during the season and added another during this match. The right side hitter with 10 kills and 11 digs. Setting up many of those 10 looks was junior Lalash Alexander, who posted 11 assists.

Sophomore outside hitter Shandel Nikszifner chipped in with eight kills and four digs.

Against UAB the Knights had nine team blocks, junior middle blocker Jana Mitchell had four of those, as well as nine kills.

After winning both matches on the road trip, the Knights were scheduled to finish their road trip on Sunday afternoon against the Pirates at the Elma Roane Fieldhouse.

Results from Sunday's match were not available at press time.

Around C-USA

Southern Miss vs. North Carolina State

North Carolina State refused to give up, tying late to overcome a 14-point deficit and beat the Golden Eagles 14-27.

Quarterback Marcus Stone connected with Brian Clark with little more than five minutes remaining to give the Wolfpack the lead and the victory.

Rebounding on the legs of freshman Andre Brown, the Wolfpack was able to score 13 unanswered points in the fourth quarter to sweep the series for Brown, this was Round 1.

Another setback for men's soccer team

Bryan Murphy of the Daily Commercial

The Knights soccer team's living streak extended to four games after a 1-0 loss to the University of Kentucky, Elmont.

With the defeat, the Golden Knights fell to 6-6-1 overall and 4-4 in Conference USA. Meanwhile, the Wildcats improved to 10-4-3 in C-USA.

UCF managed one goal in the first half that led to a tie game, but they could not hold a 1-0 lead in the second half that led to a 1-0 loss for the Knights.

But the Knights are still holding on to a share of third place in the conference after another loss.

One of the main reasons behind UCF's continued success is their defense in the last four games and first-ever road win.

Another reason is the Knights' defense in the last four games and their ability to score goals. The Knights have scored two goals in their last three games, which is a significant improvement from their 0-0-0 record last season.

Despite a slow start to the season, the Knights have shown improvement in recent weeks. They have scored three goals in their last three games, including a 2-0 win over Marshall in the ECU Bowl.

The Knights have won three straight games and are in the running for a share of the Conference USA title. With games remaining against Marshall and Memphis, the Knights have a good chance of clinching the conference title and a trip to the NCAA tournament.

In college football, something is considered a trend when it occurs twice or more during one season. Although this practice could be deemed stupid, history has proven that the best teams, and the leaders are difficult to ignore.

The trend for UCF has been a tale of two teams. Louisville and Memphis were able to lose doubles in the first week of the season, but the Cardinals and Tigers drowned themselves in the flames of the season. Tulane and Marshall strolled themselves to the foot, eventually dominating themselves in the respective composites.

On Monday night in Greeley, NC., the Knights looked well on their way to blowing another lead. As East Carolina scored 17 points in under eight minutes, the Knights started a drive on their 20-yard line. The key play was when quarterback Augustus Walker and Moffett ran a designed screen play up six times, the most that a quarterback has done in a game on the left sideline and outraced the defense for a huge lead.

But, on Wednesday night, 36-38, the Knights were in the lead, but eventually ended up falling short of the 10-point lead. UCF’s quarterback, Jordan Love, made some plays at the end of the game, but didn’t have enough to make a comeback. For a team that does a good job of forcing turnovers, but to have a plus-11 turnover margin is disturbing, one that Southern Miss loses one of their last three games is not as unheard of.

East Carolina comes off the loss last week clicking offensively, and are looking to continue that against Memphis. The Pirates scored six plays later on 3rd and 9 to the left sideline and outraced the defense for a huge lead. The fact remains that the city was overreacting and provided no reason toward implementing parkland laws and to start the loosening of the problems present in Orlando, and it seems like nothing has been done at all.

In Las Vegas, for instance, former home-staying citizens turned up with the police a long time ago to help the community maintain its population. They helped put them in jails and safe environments to eat and sleep. The results have shown impressive decreases in homelessness and criminal behavior among the vagrant community.

Orlando meanwhile emitted mixed signals about the status of homeless people. On any given night, they can walk any street and ask people for money outside almost anywhere. Yet when local charities are greedy, they have to help feed them and offer them safe houses or means of retaliation. It also means of retaliation.

As the weather becomes increasingly cooler and more people arrive, the city will continue to flock to the North. It's been this way for at least a year and if only asks, the city will be easier to pare to handle such an influx. The increase in the homeless population turns the City Beautiful into the City Dangerous, as no one feels safe walking the street at night when they're stepped on every five feet and asked for money.

There are kind and generous church circles of people. For instance, the Clinton administration, and they were not alone. None of them are equipped to handle increasing numbers of homeless people. The city needs to step up and set a standard practice and enforce it once and for all.

It's unacceptable for those anti-attitudes of individuals and ignorance to continue because they'll not only open the door further to crimes committed by the homeless, but also crimes committed against the homeless.

The city needs to stop providing new laws and zoning for parkland and it needs to start defining. It needs to stop turning its back on the groups that are making a difference within the homeless community and start helping them, if not to put home­less to safety to those and take them off our streets, by changing the face of what they are doing.

The homeless problem in Orlando may become more of a burden because of the lack of additional effort on the part of the city to make it happen. Otherwise, the City Beautiful might as well be the City Inefficient.

I wanted to say that Loglan really demonstrated some aspects as she has been the mentor and supporter of so many activities, progressive leaders on campus like me, the Uncommon Grounds, a feminist intellectual community group, and other instructors such as Alison Smith. Women's studies paid for the poles rented from the UCF Arena that made the presentation possible.

Loglan is an incredible leader, mentor, professor and director and deserves recognition for creating such a successful and active program that really addresses the equity and validity of people on the UCP campus and the drive to make a difference in our UCF community as well as the larger Orlando community.

Women's studies abound
I am writing in response to your coverage of the Uncommon Grounds Project.
I think that this important feminist activist event got the needed press that it deserved; however, there are some corrections that must be made.
First, Loglan is the women's studies program director. Second, my introduction to Women's Studies Class, along with Uncommon Grounds, FMLA and Harbor House, women's project the center.
This collaboration created the powerful display that was witnessed Oct. 26. It is important to note that the women's studies program is very visible on all campuses of UCF and is committed to putting theory into practice.

Forget the bad memory defense
For many decades, Washington political figures have relied on the 'bad memory' defense to try to justify that high-profile political figures thought to be possibly expected to remember events and conversations that took place months or even years ago.

Libby, the former top aide to Vice President Dick Cheney, has been the center of a controversy involving a possible White House leak of classified information. In the case of Patrick Fitzgerald, an attorney for former Vice President Dick Cheney, it has been alleged that Libby had a means of retaliation.

The indictment against Libby outlines the various means of retaliation for the泄t of the identity of CIA agent Valerie Plame Wilson being the source for columns and a court-ordered counsel Patrick Fitzgerald alleges that Libby initially leaked Plame's identity to Time magazine and thus misled the grand jury about his knowledge.

Libby contends that he didn't know anything about Plame's identity being given to reporters. Fitzgerald obviously wants to prove that not only did Libby know about Plame's identity but also that he learned it from Cheney and revealed it as a means of retaliation against Plame's husband, Joe Wilson, a former ambassador and post-opponent of President George W. Bush.

Although Libby includes denial with any involvement and now is denying the back mark and blame bad memo as the reason for his [illegal] act. Then, Fitzgerald and the prosecution have a duty to make sure that the people at fault are justifiedly held accountable for their actions.

When members of the Reagan and Bush Sr. administrations were testifying in the Iran-Contra hearings, they used the same defense, because the defendant brought to trial until years after the crime was committed. Only one person involved received a prison sentence. All of the other officials involved were later pardoned by President George W. Bush.

Bill and Hillary Clinton used the defense during their White House years, and they were cleared of questionable real estate deals, primarily because they took place long before any hearings for the Clintons to correctly recall all of the events involved.

This country's legal system is based on the truth with sufficient evidence and there certainly seems to be overwhelming evidence against Libby that shows he was indeed the initial leak and that he lied previously about his knowledge.

Fitzgerald can prove his case for Libby as Libby's case will be accepted the price or come down.

Regardless of the fact that Libby's career was ruined or the existence of some sort of deal between Wilson and Bush administration officials, Libby will remain of his duty and stop hindering behind this pathetic defense.

I think that Libby should move forward and face the few first allowed criminal acts by powerful politi­cal leaders to be brought to light.

Halloween lets us relive our youth, our 'sexy' youth

Don't wear a costume just to be sexy. However, there's nothing wrong with taking time out to celebrate. So why not go all out, and enjoy the more interesting costumes you can find.

Women have it so incredibly raw on Halloween. All they have to do is show up in whatever they wear and they become the center of attention at a Halloween party. Wonder Woman, Catgirl or even a "sexy" junior does the job just fine.

Guys, on the other hand, don't have that luxury and therefore have to work much harder and actually use their brains to come up with something creative and original. Unfortunately, most of us don't possess the ability to concentrate long enough, and we end up going with something outdated or lame.

We don't have the convenience of throwing a timer like "sexy" in front of it, because there's nothing we can do to exhibit seduction, short of wearing a bunny costume and growing up a mustache. Besides, anything more guys try to portray as "sexy" is likely to come across as "effeminate" or "too feminine.

A guy can't dress up in a Speedo and a hand, try to have some idea that are timeless and can be used every year, some people don't understand that original ideas are good for only about a year before they lose their charm and jump from that "Oh, look how awesome that costume is" to "Oh, poor guy, he thinks he's still living in '906."

For instance, one guy was dressed as Will Ferrell's character from the infamous Saturday Night Live skit "More Cowbell" skit, and it worked because that will always be funny and we've never seen that costume before. But I had a problem with the guy dressed as Napoleon Dynamite because it was done to death last year and it basically lost its charm. Another factor of timeliness is making sure that your costume has not exceeded the standard waiting period for offensive mixes.

One person last night was dressed as for Kate Winslet and JFK, complete with a lollipop in his mouth and a bullet wound on his head. I've ever seen. I was going to dress up as a pregnant Hooters girl from Bithlo. I ran into a, though, when I tried on a pair of actual orange Hooters shorts and split them up the side. It's one thing to come up with a creative costume idea, but it's another to have to sacrifice your self-esteem in order to do so. Then again, I'm not sure which is worse -- seeking a pair of tiny shorts while trying them on or actually fitting into them.

Regardless, Halloween is a time for people to emphasize their imaginations. It's an opportunity for people to condemn the idea of dressing as silly as possible on one night that it's acceptable. It reminds us that we're never too old to act like kids and draw upon our childhoods for the sake of productivity. We can dress as the pink Power Ranger or Lightning McQueen, but with our imaginations, we can also use our imaginations to dress up as real people. Halloweens can help women get rid of their "sexy" dreams, and men can do the same again!

MOUTHING OFF

ASHLEY BURNS

"sexy". cowgirls, vampires and "naughty" vampires, and police officers and "foppishly dandy" police officers.

But some people actually made me take the time to comment because I appreciate the creativity that goes into a quality costume, and sometimes I get offended when I see a costume that took three seconds and is more worn out than Tim Roth's bed springs. Timeliness is the most important factor in a Halloween costume because while you have some ideas that are timeless and can be used every year, some people don't understand that original ideas are good for only about a year before they lose their charm and jump from that "Oh, look how awesome that costume is" to "Oh, poor guy, he thinks he's still living in '906."
