Recently formed Ballroom Dancing Club growing fast

The UCF Ballroom Dancing Club waited enthusiastically onto campus scene last September, offering free dance lessons to UCF students, faculty, staff and alumni.

"As far as ballroom dancing goes, our club is the first organization like this on the UCF campus," Bailey Odum said, club president and dance instructor.

The Ballroom Dancing Club, also known as Dance the Knight Away, is year-round and offers weekly dance lesson meetings and social dance parties to all of its attendees.

"We started over the summer getting things organized and had a table set up at the freshman orientation," Odum said.

Now, the club is really becoming established as more and more people are starting to hear about it.

The first Ballroom Dancing Club meeting was held in September, and it has continued its meetings every Thursday of every week from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in the UCF Multipurpose Room, Education Building 24.

"I think it’s a really good opportunity for students because it’s right here on campus," club member and UCF senior Chevas Richardson said.

"There is an optional $10 fee for anyone interested in becoming an official club member. The fee pays for two semester's worth of professional dance instruction to come in and instruct the class, as well as future events and room equipment.

Students spend hours in line for inaugural Conference USA title game

BY MATT BOSCH

Some students skipped class and lunch, and some even roomed to evacuate the Student Union during a fire alarm Tuesday while waiting in line to buy tickets for the Conference USA Championship football game against Tulsa on Saturday.

Some arrived as early as 8:30 a.m. and waited more than four hours in line to a line that started at the TicketMaster window inside the Student Union and stretched outside the building and all the way around the back near its loading dock.

The line was orderly and peaceful at first but soon erupted into "complete utter chaos" when someone pulled the university’s fire alarm shortly after 9 a.m., senior Daniel Csonka said.

Some students, such as Csonka, who were at the front of the line at first refused to evacuate the doors but were forced out of the building.

"They had no push on us," Csonka said. "Basically, the whole line got turned around in reverse, and the people that showed up got in first and we got in last. There was no control. It was close to a fight breaking out.

After Union officials and building managers persuaded students to leave the building because of the fire alarm, there was an immediate rush to get to the front of a new line that was forming in front of the Union.

"There was a bunch of people outside against the curb and a bunch of people trying to get into line," sophomore Christian Vapes said, adding that there was "lots of yelling and fighting" and "lots of yelling and fighting".

Dance club receives more funding, securing space for rest of the year more professional instructors, the club will be on a whole new level, and it'll attract a much wider audience," club vice president and UCF freshman Chris Jacobs said.

There are currently 12 members in the club. No one is obligated to become a member. However, members are the only ones invited to the professional instruction meetings. "We'd like to see a lot more members. That way, we can accommodate for a growing club," club treasurer and UCF sophomore Jon Martin said.

The Ballroom Dancing Club offers instruction for such dances as the tango, salsa, merengue, foxtrot, swing and the cha-cha. "The swing is definitely my favorite," UCF club secretary Matthew Kauble said. "It's open and it's very social. That's why I love it."

The lessons are very student-oriented, in terms of what dances are covered and how quickly we move through them." - RACHEL ODOM, 12024 Royal Wulff Lane, Orlando, FL 32817, Phone: (407) 277-4007

"I've been ballroom dancing for about a year and a half, and I love it," Odom said. "I wanted to make ballroom dancing both accessible and affordable to the UCF community."

"My pace of instruction is dependent entirely upon the pace of the students who attend our meetings. The lessons are very student-oriented, in terms of what dances are covered and how quickly we move through them."

At the meetings, male and female attendees are usually split up and taught their portion of the dance individually. Males then choose to ask one of the females to dance and each one performs the moves they'd just learned as a pair. "It's good that you actually get to dance with someone," UCF freshman and club attendee Renee Jaggie said. "You're not just learning the moves by yourself."

The number of people coming has been really consistent - about 20-30 - and it usually balances out really well with the male to female ratio," Jacobs said.

The club recently received funding from the Student Government Association to pay for full coverage of the Multipurpose Room for the entire year. The funding will also go toward subsidizing compact disc players and CDs used in the weekly meetings. "I was ecstatic to hear about the new funding," Jacobs said. "Now we know for sure that the club will have a secure future, and it will become a lasting club on campus."

The Ballroom Dancing Club will be hosting its first annual Winter Ball at 8 p.m. this Friday. It will be held in the Ferrell Auditorium, which is located near the Marketplace across from the Recreation and Wellness Center.

We'd like to see a lot more members. That way, we can accommodate for a growing club," club treasurer and UCF sophomore Jon Martin said.

The dress is semi-formal, and it's open to anyone who would like to attend, not just club members and attendees. There is no guest admission. However, there may be an optional $3 to $5 donation for any non-members. "I think that, as we have more socials, students will really enjoy it, and the club will grow even more," Jacobs said.

The Ballroom Dancing Club's official Web site is http://pegasus.cc.ucf.edu/~bal. It offers detailed information on club membership, schedule of events and officer backgrounds.

I am sexually active, and I am concerned about HIV and AIDS. What should I know about the disease, and should I be tested?

Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) is a life-threatening disease caused by the human immunodeficiency virus. AIDS attacks the body's immune system, rendering it less effective at fighting off bacterial, viral, and fungal infections. It also makes people more susceptible to certain types of cancers and certain infections that the body would normally resist, like opportunistic infections.

The term AIDS is normally used to describe when HIV has reached a certain level in the bloodstream or when infected persons experience an illness or infections that usually only occur when the immune system is compromised. Hence, HIV and AIDS refer to different stages of the same disease.

When most people are first infected with HIV, they often have no symptoms. Severe or persistent symptoms may not appear for up to 10 years or longer. Some people, when first infected, develop a flu-like illness one to two months after exposure. Symptoms may include fever, headaches, fatigue, and lymphadenopathy, or swollen lymph nodes in two or more areas of the body. Unfortunately, these symptoms are often mild, and they may be very common among people with upper respiratory infections.

Most sexually active teens are more apprehensive about HIV than about other sexually transmitted diseases. While HIV may be more prevalent in Africa or South America, the disease is not limited to these areas and can be transmitted to anyone. The AIDS epidemic has been leading killer of women in the Americas since the late 1980s.

In comparison, there were only 51,000 new cases of HIV in 2001. The most common STDs are those caused by bacteria, which causes genital warts, while other STDs often cause genital ulcers. About 50 percent of the active population has HIV, and approximately 3 percent of the sexually active population test positive for HIV.

Spreading HIV

The methods of transmitting HIV have been clearly identified in scientific studies. HIV can be transmitted by contact with blood, semen and vaginal secretions. Although transmission may be less likely, HIV can be spread through oral intercourse. Finally, HIV can be transmitted from an HIV-infected mother to her infant and can be spread via breast feeding. There is no evidence to suggest that HIV can be spread through sweat, tears, urine or feces. HIV is not transmitted through water or food, and it cannot be spread by insect bites.

Because symptoms of HIV may not appear for 10 years or even years, screening for HIV is very important. Your healthcare provider usually can diagnose HIV by testing your blood for the presence of antibodies, or markers, to the virus. After testing, HIV antibody testing should be repeated. It can take up to six months for enough antibodies to be produced to show up in blood tests.

Getting tested

On the UCOP campus, an HIV blood test is done at the Student Health Center, and at oral oral HIV test is done at Beach for Wellness on the first floor of the Recreational and Wellness Center. The Internet offers dozens of products marketed for HIV. Screening is recommended for young adults.

Currently, the only Food and Drug Administration-certified home test is made by Home Access Health.

common bird illness, why are people suddenly becoming ill? The avian flu is an RNA virus similar to AIVs, which means it is prone to frequent and rapid mutations, depending to Debopam Chakrabarti, assistant professor of molecu­lar and microbiology at UCF: "Whatever the method, many scientists agree that it’s probably not the only way. They wouldn’t treat the pandemic form of the virus, scientists warn, but they could prove useful in preventing the spread of the virus. that would lead to the pandemic. National and private buyers are rushing to stockpile Tam­flu, seen as the superior antiviral among many, but there is simply not enough to go around. Tam­flu’s exclusive manufacturer is already battling a backlog of orders due to the drug’s potential for manufacturing process. At present capacity, it would take 10 years to produce enough for 20 percent of the world’s population. Also, is should be emphasized that there is currently no form of the flu that is easily transmitted from human to human.

Meanwhile, two of the countries hardest hit by the bird flu, China and Vietnam, took extreme measures to fight the disease on Nov. 3. China promoted to vaccinate its entire poultry stock of 14 billion birds, paying all fees involved. Vietnamese officials ordered farmers in its two largest cities to kill or sell all poultry by today.

This highly fatal hybrid virus, easily passed between humans, would be the harbinger of chaos so many fear. Governments around the globe declare the U.S. has already begun manufacturing vaccines against the current bird flu strain, but some say it’s too little, too late.

"I don’t think world leaders are doing enough," Annette Khaled, assistant professor of the Biomolecular Science Center at UCF, said. "It takes time for these things to develop, and you have to invest in research. You can’t just do things quickly.

For example, George W. Bush outlined a $3 billion strategy to prepare for the danger of a pandemic, hoping to stockpile enough vaccines to protect 20 million Americans against the current strain of bird flu. But because of the country’s high age of mutation, many scientists call this a false form and a waste of money.

"The vaccines generally work well as long as the parent strain has not mutated," Alexander Cole, assistant professor of molecular and microbiology at UCF, said. However, "Once the virus mutates to the point that the current vaccines and antibodies can no longer recognize the virus, the vaccines are no longer effective." But it’s not all bad news.

Antiviral drugs like Tamiflu and Relmiflu are being used as damage control in humans infected with the virus, and in many cases have proved effective. "They wouldn’t treat the pandemic form of the virus, scientists warn, but they could prove useful in preventing the spread of the virus. that would lead to the pandemic. "They wouldn’t treat the pandemic form of the virus, scientists warn, but they could prove useful in preventing the spread of the virus. That may take care of poultry and farm workers, but it doesn’t protect against wild waterfowl. When H5N1 is thought to have originated, WHO believes it may have spread. 2005 die-off of 6,000 dead birds may be a signal that the virus is spreading to new species."

Chakrabarti fears that birds may not be the only threat. There is a possibility that other animals, not just birds, are already silent carriers of the avian influence, he said. "I think this virus in showing a little broader host range than the earlier forms," Chakrabarti said. "Some of the disease could be asymptomatic; maybe other animals are getting it but not showing symptoms."

There have been several published cases of avian flu-related death that could support Chakrabarti’s theory. The most recent one involved two Indonesian students this month who died after having flu-like symptoms and contact with sick birds. One of the patients was a doctor, according to a doctor who treated one of the patients.

WHO still maintains that, "though rare, instances of lim­ited human-to-human trans­mission of H5N1 exist..." and have occurred in association with outbreaks in poultry and should not be a cause for alarm. In no instance has the virus spread beyond a first generation of close contacts or caused illness in the general public.

At a Nov. 7-9 meeting in Geneva at WHO headquarters, more than 600 delegates from over 100 countries laid the foundation for worldwide cooperation against the virus. In his conclusion, WHO direc­tor-general Lee Jong-wook said, "We have plans on paper, but we must now test them. Once a pandemic virus appears, it will be too late."

Many of these plans include faster and less-expensive vaccine methods. Bush’s administration plan, for exam­ple, stresses the cell culture method growing the virus in easy-to-handle cell cultures instead of the current, cum­bersome process requiring millions of chicken eggs.

Cell culture vaccines are easier to mass produce than live vaccines, says the cell culture method. They wouldn’t treat the pandemic form of the virus, scientists warn, but they could prove useful in preventing the spread of the virus. that would lead to the pandemic. which average 1.4 million viewers nightly, also indicated that more people in the 18- to 24-year-old age gap were watching The Daily Show to get their information rather than news networks FOX, MSNBC, and CNN.

The polls also indicated that young people who watch The Daily Show scored 48 percent on a campaign knowledge test, while young people who did not scored 39 percent.

"I read the Sentinel when I run across a copy, and I skim each issue of the Future," said Lindsey Leplere, a social sciences/history major. "But the Daily Show is an entertaining way to stay sharp on current events. And it's aired at a convenient time for college students: late at night."

Others like how the show presents political topics. "Jon Stewart doesn't try to force-feed his opinions down the viewers' throats," engineering major Brian Bustos said. "He presents them and states the facts in hilarious ways. I think most kids watch The Daily Show instead of reading the newspaper or watching CNN or FOX News because those channels provide a negative view of the world. I personally believe that the media uses fear to make people sit and watch intensely."

Bass says that the show's laid-back attitude helps make politics more appealing for young people. "The primary reason he is successful is due to irreverence, the lack of formality of The Daily Show on the news of the day and Stewart's statement of it," Bass said. "He is gifted in appropriately coming up with offbeat comments, which are not escaped."

However, some see the program's "anti-mainstream news" position as unsavory. "UCF radio/television professor Gene Costain said that during his infamous Crossfire interview where Stewart was interviewed by Tucker Carlson, he was criticizing the host for the same reason his show is successful. He was accusing them of debauching democracy with the same kind of mundane questions guests are asked."

Others don't like the show's approach to politics. "It provides information in an overly sarcastic and demeaning way," hospitality management major Rob Digiano said. "It leans to the left and, although the news is somewhat accurate, Jon Stewart's facial expressions and his bias against the Bush administration do their job in twisting the information that is given."

Recently, the success of The Daily Show resulted in a spin-off called The Colbert Report, hosted by former Daily Show member Stephen Colbert.

The show differs from The Daily Show in that it predominantly spoofs aggressive pundit programs such as The O'Reilly Factor and Hardball.

Whatever the reason for The Daily Show's success, it's seems clear that as long as there's news, Stewart and crew will be ready to spoof.

Usually, at this time of year, the focus of all the state's football fans is on the final four-week stretch of the regular season. This year, however, it's evident that there are plenty of other things to keep you interested, beginning with the Orlando UCF vs. South Florida game this Saturday. The Knights are off to a 6-0 start, while USF is 4-2, and the two will meet at the Citrus Bowl. Will this be the moment when the Knights finally break through to their first Conference USA Championship?

Our STANCE

Most wonderful time of the years

With Thanksgiving, back to the family for a year that I've crafted. It's the only time of the year when the whole family is together. It's a time for giving thanks and celebrating the blessings that we have. It's a time for family gatherings, and sharing a meal with loved ones.

Holidays are close but the lousy songs are already here

MOUTHING OFF

ASHLEY BURNS

For the Blessings that they have subsequent vulgarities. Last week, the Supreme Court and attempt to shove a "Victory for our troops" in front of the justices. The Court's decision to reverse the lower court's ruling that it had arrested Jose Padilla is not going to be charged with a crime — it's a victory for our troops.

Our STANCE

Tricky business at the White House

In May 2002, the Bush administration proudly announced that it had arrested Jose Padilla, a Brooklyn-born cittizen, for his suspected role in the planned terrorist attacks on the United States. Padilla had been under surveillance by the FBI and other government agencies for several years, and was eventually charged with conspiracy to commit terrorism. Despite the lack of evidence, Padilla was held for over 6 years in a military facility without the assistance of a lawyer, and without the ability to seek a fair trial.

Our STANCE

No one should be held in prison without the ability to challenge their detention or seek a fair trial. The Bush administration's policies on torturing prisoners and holding them without charge have been condemned by the international community. The administration's policies on torturing prisoners and holding them without charge have been condemned by the international community.

READER VIEWS

Form of protest acceptable

In today's UCF, the Editorial Board writes about the "good job" that everyone is doing in supporting our troops. The Bush administration has decided to invade and occupy Iraq by saying that it is a "good job".

Our STANCE

I'm a veteran of the war in Iraq and I'm not sure if the Bush administration's policies on torturing prisoners and holding them without charge have been condemned by the international community. The administration's policies on torturing prisoners and holding them without charge have been condemned by the international community.

Providing more information about the UC Irvine campus is something that we as students should be doing in our daily lives. The campus should provide more information about the UC Irvine campus to students and visitors.

Our STANCE

This is just a suggestion from someone who does not want to provide more information about the UC Irvine campus.
