The Winter Park location opened its doors on Oct. 3, during the Autumn Art Festival. An Indian guitarist entertained the crowd who enjoyed food from the Whole Foods store.

The number of volunteers has jumped from 20 to 95 since the store opened.

"Volunteer positions are very well-paid," Dipboye said.

Mary Dipboye, president of the Board of Ten Thousand Villages, Orlando, Inc., said, "It's all about pacemaking and poverty reduction in Third World countries.

Dipboye, who has been involved with the organization since 1998, said, "I've always been interested in helping people with their community projects, and I went in the first day of class knowing that I learned my project with Ten Thousand Villages.

"I truly believe in the mission of the Ten Thousand Villages of Orlando, Inc. and hope to continue my involvement with this cause in the future," said Blanchet.

Fair trade store features native art from Third World countries

BRITTANY CURRIER

Create jewelry bags and home decor from the world's eco-friendly shop. Volunteers scuffle around to put out the newest merchandise, mostly holiday items, and talk about music plays in the background of the Ten Thousand Villages store.

A small shop with a big purpose, Ten Thousand Villages is located on Park Avenue in Winter Park. Its unique mission - fair trade.

Every item in the store is made by an artisan from a Third World country in Africa, Asia, the Middle East, Latin America, the Ten Thousand Villages organization, headquartered in Pennsylvania, manages the store.

People are absolutely surprised by our products.

The profit of a typical Ten Thousand Villages artisan is a woman who may be a single mother with several children, in constant conflict for repairs, or a man such as having a mental handicap or being widowed, in being part of the indigenous communities. It's all about pacemaking and poverty reduction in Third World countries.

Fair trade product sales to Ten Thousand Villages. About 100 people attended and $300 was raised.

"The first of its kind, we hope to continue working with Ten Thousand Villages in the future."

"I'm not just doing a project with a random organization for a class that's mandatory for me. I truly believe in the mission of Ten Thousand Villages, Summers said. "And I hope to continue volunteering with Ten Thousand Villages in the future."

Police continue to investigate a nightclub brawl in which a Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity member appeared to have trouble breathing. Another man received assistance in order to "keep him from lying in his own vomit," and one "could not walk under his own power," according to Orange County Records.

Police found "numerous" beer cans and bottles, as well as a "mangled" beer bottle with a "coiled" wire around its neck, scattered on the floor of the SAE house.

The Office of Student Conduct plans to schedule a meeting on the details in the report, the fraternity headquarters, and the fraternity's board of directors will make its final decisions on the future of the chapter next week.

SAE headquarters may choose to conduct a membership review in which alumni would interview each active member and decide whether he gets to keep his membership. Then the chapter would operate under an alumni advisory group, which would have to approve all of its operations.

The board may also choose to close the chapter. Members would be automatically suspended pending an investigation by the headquarters, and the chapter would remain dormant for a predetermined period of time.

The university may agree to allow SAE to petition for recognition in a few years.

A finding of hazing could result in charges of either a misdemeanor or felony offenses. No SAE member has been charged with a crime yet, but the case remains under investigation.

The blood-alcohol level of the victim could be used to determine the severity of the offense. If the levels were very high, that could constitute "serious bodily injury" which could make felony charges.

On a university level, any organization found to be in violation of student conduct rules could face the following sanctions:

- Financial: an official request to the fraternity to cease and desist from its activities, an order to refund all or part of the SAE's relationship with the university.

- Regulatory: a finding of hazing could constitute a university-level investigation by the UCF. The UCF would automatically suspend any SAE organization found to be in violation of student conduct rules.

- Disciplinary: a finding of hazing could constitute a criminal charge.

The university and chapter may receive punishment in another way.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon was suspended Oct. 26 on three charges involving hazing and alcohol-related offenses.

Main point: l guity to lesser charge in killing of 16th

JACKSONVILLE—One of three men charged in the hefting death of a University of Florida student after a Florida-Georgia football game pleaded guilty to lesser charges Mark Fox, 29, had been charged with second-degree murder in the beating of Thomas Brown last fall in downtown Jacksonville.

He pleaded guilty to the lesser charge on Wednesday. "We feel that based on the facts, this was an appropriate plea," said his attorney, John Rios. He said he would seek the maximum five-year sentence for Fox at a hearing on Nov 15.

Fox co-defendant Jeremy Lang, 21, was convicted of manslaughter and second-degree murder in the beating of Brown which occurred in prison at his sentencing, which was held on Nov. 17 for both Lane and Fox. A third defendant, Alexander, 22, also from Jacksonville, is awaiting trial on second-degree murder charges.

Authorities say surveillance video showed Brown, 21, being beaten by three men and beaten by two others after the Florida-Georgia game on Oct. 28, 2000. A gala, Thursday, to farewell an action that was not immediately returned.

Israel student radio could lose FM license for decency

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. — A new run radio station at Indiana University might lose its broadcasting license because of a country country music sta-

WUIS has been broadcasting from the Indiana University campus for 40 years and has been on the FM band at 106.3 since Jan.

Because WUIS has a low-power license, Federal Communications Commission rules allow WUIS, licensed to Bloomington, to take over the frequency, said WUIS station manager Zach Pollock.

"The rules governing Low Power FM are either not clear or ent or still in the making because it is a fairly new type of license," Pollock said.

WUIS station manager Mike King said the station was simply trying to expand broadcast signal and said he did not think the expansion would force WUIS off FM. He said the station, which also is known as "Korn Country," secrecy the frequency it held would soon be boosting its signal.

Pollock said he was not sure why the station could return to AM radio. The AM signal reached a much smaller audience once, he said.

The station had been trying to gain access to a more powerful frequency since 1979, said 12J Dean of Students Richard McDlin.

"I'd be a shame to pull the plug on a station from under them now,"

WUIS's move in January to FM was sponsored largely by donations from alumni, Pollock said.

Rising community college delinquency rates could be linked to student violence

TORONTO — A new report says the number of college and university students running up an alarming amount of debt.

And the trend is threatening to be a serious threat to the very young people, government policies want to stop the growing high.

This year, 44 percent of college students will have borrowed more than $40,000 for their education, up from 33 percent last three years ago.

And the percentage of students who debts of more than $50,000 has jumped from 29 percent from 2006 to 37 percent this year.

The report was done by the Canada Millennium Scholarship. The board of the board was created by Ottawa to help increase learning in ordinary education.

Edward Clapham, director of advocacy for Ontario College Student Alliance, says the financial burden may put off the students who already could in lower numbers — eligible years, depending on how big and students whose parents did not play a part in it.

Iran test fires long-range misile as part of new maneuvers

IRAN — The official IRIB news agency said Iran test-fired dozens of missiles last week in a new round of maneuvers.

It said that such missiles were aimed at "overseas enemies" but did not specify what kind of enemies.

The show of strength came as Iran continued to look for a West with its nuclear program, which was suspended by Washington says is geared to producing atomic weapons and fear Iran is only for generating electricity. The maneuvers were aimed three days after U.S.-led warships finished naval exercises in the Gulf that Iran branded as "adventures.

State television reported that several kinds of missiles were tested, and broadcast footage of them being fired from mobile launchers.

"We want to show our defense and defensive powers to trans-regional eneries," the head of the Revolutionary Guards, Gen. Yahya Rahim Safavi, said in a clear reference to the United States, Britain, and France, who were among the six nations that took part in the Gulf maneuvers over the weekend.

Iranian state radio said:

"The maneuver is aimed at providing security in the region without the intervention of regional and extra-regional powers, which are trying to justify their presence by portraying the region as insecure.

More than 300,000 "anti-missile" balloons were stored in a firing field in Iran.

Freshman David Raanan’s friend, David Tate, hasn’t noticed a change in taste since the water was changed to chlorine. We have a sculpture garden out front and it is really nice. It is a lot more open and airy than before. I’ve noticed a few things like the water in the sink is a bit cloudy. Sometimes when I use the water for my hands it feels a bit rough, but overall I think it is a great improvement. I’m glad they made the switch to chlorine because it provides a clearer and more pleasant water source. The public notices were very helpful in guiding us through the process. I think it’s important for everyone to be aware of what’s happening with their water supply.”

— LAUREN CHAMBERLIN

GASTON COUNTY DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

Keeping on the issue, Russert asked both candidates point-blank whether they would remain in the race if they lost the election.

Nelson said that he wouldn’t and branded his initial support for the war on "misused information." Harris declined from answering the question, even directly, after Russert asked several times.

"There wouldn't have been a war," she said.

Russert then questioned Harris on her support for a national sales tax program that would eliminate most taxes and replace them with a 23-cent national sales tax.

Harris explained her position, saying that Florida has the most onerous tax system in the world," and said that the plan would boost the economy.

Russert then questioned her if she was wrong that more than 30 percent of Floridians don't make enough to pay federal taxes, before asking Nelson's opinion on the program.

"No, Nelson, so what's wrong with a 23-cent sales tax and eliminating the H&R Block" asked Russert, drawing laughter from both candidates.

Nelson argued against Harris' plan, saying, "if we took the average taxpayer would wind up paying them more than they do now."

Asked on Social Security, Russert asked Harris to clarify her history of when she's not electing Christians, then went on to ask her about her voting list.

Harris said that she was simply trying to differentiate between herself and Nelson. She followed by saying that Nelson was voting different, but she doesn't support his expressed positions on the issue.

Nelson countered, saying, "why faith is the essence of my being; I just choose not to wear on my sleeves." The end of the debate, punctuated by both candidates' closing statements asking directly for votes, drew a standing applause from the crowd, who had much to say after the lively debate.

"Harris just seemed to avoid the questions," Jared Adelman, a political science major, said. "And when she did give an answer, she often essentially repeated what Nelson said."

Adelman, a member of the UCF College Democrats, said Nelson was the clear winner, "Nelson has a plan and has the facts to back him up." Mike Vinzig, a business major and self-proclaimed independent, thought that Nelson is just offering a smoke screen.

"In his nine-term in office he's flip-flopped from being pro-life to pro-choice, voted on initiatives that go against his written platforms and frankly. Harris may not be the best choice, but I'd rather give a new person a chance than re-elect a liar." In the mini press conferences flanking the Pegasus Ballroom after the debate, Harris and Nelson were asked with quick comments on issues not covered in the debates by College Republicans, College Democrats, press and invited guests.

"One of the greatest concerns for America and for Florida is establishing a strong economy that will serve as the model for the rest of the nation," Harris said.

"When I elected a plan on working closely with Sen. Mel Martinez to oppose blunt tax amnesty [and] establish protocols to create a temporary, legal workforce with a secured identification system, strengthening our borders begins with one initiative, and I plan on establishing that," Harris said that her economic plans would help college students, saying, "I want to make this Florida strong for your generation. Florida's economy has the highest job creation and the lowest unemployment rates in the nation. Young people need someone who can invest in their future, and I plan to do that when I win." Nelson said that his support of financial aid should show students his dedication to their futures.

"For the past six years I've supported more financial assistance because I believe that as how essential education is to America," he said.

"Endorsed by the Orlando Sentinel, The Florida Times-Union and the Pensacola News Journal, among others," Nelson has held a consistent double-digit lead in polls. Asked after the debate whether Harris thought she had made up the necessary groundwork, she said she didn't "leave that up to the voters.

Overall, the event proved to be an asset to the UCF community-at-large, and provided what political science associate professor Aubrey Emert calls a "rope for UCF" ... it speaks well of us when one of the most important events of the year realizes that Orlando is politically important."

"Mostly, I'd call the debate a draw; unlike in past debates, they both clearly stated their ground to define their positions," Harris quipped.

"Endorsed by the Orlando Sentinel, The Florida Times-Union and the Pensacola News Journal, among others," Nelson has held a consistent double-digit lead in polls. Asked after the debate whether Harris thought she had made up the necessary groundwork, she said she didn't "leave that up to the voters."

"Overall, the event proved to be an asset to the UCF community-at-large, and provided what political science associate professor Aubrey Emert calls a "rope for UCF" ... it speaks well of us when one of the most important events of the year realizes that Orlando is politically important."

"Mostly, I'd call the debate a draw; unlike in past debates, they both clearly stated their ground to define their positions," Harris quipped.

Harris said that her economic plans would help college students, saying "I want to make this Florida strong for your generation. Florida's economy has the highest job creation and the lowest unemployment rates in the nation. Young people need someone who can invest in their future, and I plan to do that when I win." Nelson said that his support of financial aid should show students his dedication to their futures.

"For the past six years I've supported more financial assistance because I believe that as how essential education is to America," he said.

Four games, four wins or Knights miss bowl

BRIAN MURPHY
Staff writer

For the UCF football team, the plan is simple: four wins in four weeks. That simple phrase has the Knights, with their 2-6 record, still evoking a glimmer of hope.

"We know we have an opportunity to win those four games and get bowl-eligible," quarterback Kyle P Özel said. "There's all we went right now."

"Some people are telling the kids they are out of it," head coach George O'Leary said, and that is not true.

Mathematically, O'Leary is right. Reckonetically, the Knights must have a November to remember for any chance at a postseason berth.

The do-or-die journey begins Saturday against the East Carolina Pirates. The Pirates have had little success in the past five seasons, but in 2006 they rose to the top of the Conference USA East Division (6-2 CUSA). It's even.

The Pirates are coming off a thrilling overtime win at Southern Miss on Oct. 28. Quarterback Jarrod Pinkney scrambled for a game-tying touchdown run with 33 seconds remaining in regulation. In overtime, the Pirates grabbed their 21st interception of the season and turned it into a 20-yard, game-winning field goal.

"There was so much the excitement and celebration in those players, East Carolina head coach Skip Holtz said. "So many of the older guys had tears in their eyes to the locker room after the game."

The Pirates are not nearly as explosive on offense as the Knights' last opponent, the Houston Cougars. To come out of the Citrus Bowl with a victory, the Pirates will rely on smart and steady play from Pinkney.

Pinkney has thrown just two touchdowns in the last four games, but over that span, he has only thrown two interceptions and has posted a 61 percent completion percentage. The Pirates have not been able to find consistent production from their running game this year, but Pinkney is also helping out in that area. He is the team's leading rusher.

"The game plan is to run the ball, run the ball, and don't stop running the ball," he said.

With the defense, the Pirates are not nearly as explosive. East Carolina has the C-USA's second-worst defense in the conference. O'Leary said, and the defense has the Knights' offense looking for the ball to be turned over.

The Pirates have not been able to force many turnovers this year, but Pinkney has the ability to turn the momentum to his side. The Pirates have not been able to find consistent production from their running game this year, but Pinkney is also helping out in that area. He is the team's leading rusher.

Homecoming can spur UCF to season-changing victory

ZACH MOORE
Staff writer

Homecoming 2006 doesn't carry much luster or importance as many would have hoped when this football season began.

The Golden Knights will take the field Saturday carrying a 2-6 record, but if you are one of the many who still drink the Kool-Aid, you will believe this team still has a chance.

With a 2-6 record in Conference USA, the Knights have dug themselves a hole from which it is pretty sure impossible to recover. We head coach George O'Leary is determined to hold out hope that his Knights can recover and the chips could end up falling in their direction.

"We are in a four-game season. You win four games, you can basically have a piece of the conference, the way our conference is on the East Division," O'Leary said.

For all of the chips to fall the way of the Knights they have to begin this week, showing up on the field in all aspects of the game.

A passing offense can't be present than an injury. "I don't have a complete lack of discipline and throw interceptions. The running" offense said, "but Kyle is the guy, once, maybe the defense can show up and play the entire four quarters.

Even with all of the negatives surrounding this team in the past weeks, the Knights have something to look forward to this game. It's homecoming. The fans will be out, and they will want to cheer for something to choose for.

When the Knights have the ball... the ball, and don't stop running the ball.

In the past two games the Knights' offensive has been running their opponent's defensive lines. The strong play of the front five has allowed the Knights running backs to run wild.

"The offense was able to run the ball more easily and more effectively," O'Leary said.

Homecoming Game Notes

Injuries: Joe Burnett is "doubtful" according to UCF coach George O'Leary, meaning Emery Allen will get the nod at corner-back after starting opposite Burnett earlier this season.

Jordan Richards is going to miss the rest of the season with a ruptured ligament in his ankle. O'Leary praised his replacement, Chance Henderson, the freshmen will start in Richards' spot this week.

Local ties for the Pirates: East Carolina quarterback Jarrod Pinkney went to Olympic Heights HS in Delray Beach. Running back Chris Johnson attended Olympic HS in Orlando. The team's other Olympian native, punter Ryan Dougherty, went to Boone HS, and wide receiver Bobby Good went to Lake Highland Prep in Lake Mary. In all, the team's 20 Florida natives on their roster.

UCF GOLDEN KNIGHTS

14 STEVEN BAKER

Position: Linebacker

This season: Since returning from a knee injury, he has played four games, making 13 tackles.

12 WILLIE THORNTON

Position: Wide receiver

This season: He has 15.3 yards per catch is 2nd on the team among those with 10+ catches.

EAST CAROLINA PIRATES

2 AUANDRAE ALLISON

Position: Wide receiver

This season: Tops on team with 26 catches, 460 receiving yards and three touchdowns.

50 QUENTIN COTTON

Position: Linebacker

This season: Second on team in tackles with 50. Also has one sack and one interception.

Pressure will be key to containing dual-threat QB Pinkney

In this three times in a row when it was 38-31. That is not playing smart, whether it was the coaches or players, it makes no difference.”

The Pirates hope to continue their recent success against the Knights, a team that is averaging 17.5 points per game. They have managed to make teams run the ball, and have allowed just 12.1 points per game.

The Pirates need to contain the Knights’ offense, which is led by quarterback Blake Pinkney. Pinkney is averaging 275 yards per game and has thrown six interceptions. This season Pinkney has been stellar. He is averaging over a 70% completion percentage this season and has thrown only two interceptions. This season Pinkney has been a threat for the Pirates.

It might have hit you during one of his bong-titting sessions on Entourage or perhaps you caught him in The Aristocrats telling the dirtiest joke of all time. It might have even occurred to you last night during his raunchy stand-up act at the UCF Arena. In any case, now, it's abundantly clear — Bob Sager is no Danny Tanner.

The Land is Borat Style

British comedian reveals the painfully funny truths of our American narrow-mindedness

WILLIAM GROSS

Borat: Cultural Learning of America for Make Benefit Greatness of Nation of Kazakhstan

GROSS CREDITS

Starring: Larry Hankin, Ken Davitian, Pamela Adlon, Sacha Baron Cohen
Rated: R—Runtime: 93 mins.

Still, although it seems that he is only singling out the people of prejudice that walk in his land, he sometimes reveals our accommodation and complicity of foreign goods, seen in this week's visit to the Algonquin Dining Society, which greets him with relish and respect.

That is, until he brings a pair of contact lenses to dinner, one of which validates the man's address on Section 66th.

The same scene demonstrates Cohen's capability to adapt to new situations—connotations and reactions but not varied types of human beings. Although a sizable portion of the comedy stems from political incorrectness and equal opportunity offenses, he is not keen on the scatological or the deeper depths of low-brow humor, and a multiplicity of such sequences in a hotel room seem unexpedient and disrespectful to support.

Such scenes are made all the more hilarious by the actors' awareness that the public in the public eye with many immoral bystanders witness more than they would probably ever hope to see.

Thankfully in one small part to a three-man team of editors, the comedic timing of Cohen and Charles still has impeccable spirit, to the point where even the heaviest burdens of laughter dropped down on the next line. Even in an impressively economic 92 minutes, the experience borders on overall, while still whetting one's appetite for the inevitable DVD supplements (Fox has already placed some deleted scenes online).

Wouldn't you know it, South Park managed a similarly glorious saturation in the same amount of time. Maybe levity has something to do with it after all?

A 2002 movie based on Cohen's Ali G character was dumped straight to video, stateside, and the rights to an upcoming movie based on Cohen's remaining persona, that of a gay German fashion reporter named Bruno, have already been sold to Universal for a good chunk of change.

One wonders exactly how much more satire social commentary Cohen can take out of it on the big screen. Whether it works or not remains to be seen, but for now, at least, fresh perceptions that reveal much about deep-seated homophobia and xenophobia and subsequently rob it of its power. When it's not done right, it's still a tremendously funny experience that provides testament to Cohen's remarkable comedic persona.

All in all, "Borat" very nice.
BRING ON THE LAUGHTER

Issue 88

So you've accepted it, Rob Saget probably doesn't own any awards. Hey, he probably doesn't even think home videos are entertaining. The 20-year-old comedian said he's spent a lifetime doing things he didn't consider funny.

Now he's doing what he wants-sitting on the roof for a 14-month, college-only tour.

"Here I am, a 25-year-old guy, and I feel like I relate a lot more to 20-year-olds than 35-year-olds," the father of three said.

Saget, who recently signed up for an account on Myspace, said he loves hearing from kids who grew up watching him on Full House and can now appreciate his stand-up comedy.

"Nobody gets shocked and says 'Oh my God, Danny Tanner is coming!'" he said. "They come knowing what to expect from my stand-up.

Saget said he opted to do a college tour because most of his fans are either college-aged or college students, but one college performance still makes him cringe.

He was performing at Northwestern, and as soon as he got on stage, girls were throwing their signed tampons at him. He said, "I could think was, 'Thank God they're in wrappers.'"

Saget said he doesn't like when people throw things at him, but "as long as it doesn't have the consistency of puddings, I'm fine."

Aside from dodging tampons, Saget has kept himself busy with two major projects: a mockumentary of 2005's March of the Penguins, which will feature the voices of Samuel L. Jackson and Dane Cook, and a host position on NBC's newest game show, "1 vs. 100," which debuted last month.

While his stand-up lineup is notably different from that of his network TV performances, Saget said he's working to integrate the two.

"Last episode (of 1 vs. 100), I said 'We're gonna do this for shingles.' Saget says with a chuckle. 'And that's about as far as I can go.'

CD REVIEW

Ben Folds' album
his biggest fold

AMANDA K. SHAPIRO

In Ben Folds the newest rapper to take the Hip-Hop world by storm? Negative. However, the singer-songwriter did turn heads with hiszach's ain't shit, mono- tone and Ebonics-speaking raps recalling obscure memo- ries that probably — and hope- fully — never really happened.

Folds clearly lacks creativity when it comes to the album-title process. For this release, he simply combined the titles from his previous albums into one word. Supersunnyspeedgraphic grabs the No. 1 spot just weeks on Paste Avenue Junior's top 10 list.

The album allowed Folds to showcase his faith in the "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." Folds' songwriting abilities give the music a definitive edge. Even Folds' transcending piano playing can't disguise his lyrics, which can often make you want to giggle or feel like you're in "Case of the Video: - There is always someone cooler than you.

My favorite pick from the album is Learn to Live with what you are. Supersunnyspeedgraphic is an upbeat and witty reminder that Folds is still alive and kick- ing. Fans of Folds should check out this album, an artist with similar skills.
