Parking Garage V solves some parking problems and adds more than 1,600 spaces

Woodrow Womack

While UCF’s newest parking garage opened last Friday, students at UCF got the chance to use the facility Monday, exciting some students about the prospect of parking relief at UCF. Parking Garage V provides 1,666 new spaces for UCF students, a large house from the 550 space lot that it replaced. Construction lasted for nearly a year and was completed just in time for the start of the spring term.

Many students were thrilled when they arrived on campus Monday to find the new garage open and functional. Others were just happy to see the construction of the garage was finally done.

"Thank God!" said Theresa Bramblett, a senior animation major who parked in the garage Monday. "They actually finished something they told us they were going to do ... and in a timely manner!"

In addition to opening up more parking spaces for students, the new garage also adds aesthetic features including a 5-foot golden Pegasis logo that is backlit at night.

"I live on campus so parking really isn’t an issue for me, except in front of my dorms," said Kevin Nicola, a freshman engineering major. "But it’s nice to come in the main entrance and not see construction."

"It should help with traffic too now that all the lots are open," Nicola said.

For 25-year-old political science major Pedro Cervantes, the new garage could mean making it to class more often. Cervantes boasted that he missed 10 classes or more because he couldn’t find a parking spaces but said he hopes the new garage will take some of the parking pressure off other lots.

UCF, faculty-union contract talks off to a good start

Board of Trustees and United Faculty of Florida have OK’d half the contract

This is only the second time the university and United Faculty of Florida’s contract has been reviewed in full since 2003. While portions of the contract, such as salaries, are negotiated yearly, the last time the entire contract was negotiated between UCF’s faculty and administration was in 2005. It’s been a real effort on both parts to put the past behind us and move on," said UCF Provost Dr. Andrew Yong.

"It’s been a real effort on both parts to put the past behind us and move on," said UCF Provost Andrew Yong. "Both UCF and the United Faculty of Florida have been working hard to reach a fair agreement that benefits both sides."

UCF and the United Faculty of Florida have been working hard to reach a fair agreement that benefits both sides. The new contract includes significant improvements in areas such as salaries, benefits, and working conditions for faculty members.

"I am very pleased with the progress we have made in negotiations," Yong said. "The faculty and administration have shown a willingness to work together for the common good of UCF."

“After the terrorist attacks, this country moved to a so-called new normal where we were giving up some of our civil liberties to security by gumming up our systems,” said Frank Lautenberg, a New Jersey senator. “The campaign against terrorism will continue to be a priority in the early hours of a new administration.”

On November 26, New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson got a bleak forecast for 2001 from a government report on the war on terrorism.

Richardson is one of the first leaders to warn of a “war against terrorism” that may require billions of dollars, and whose progress already under threat.

The governor said there will be measurable progress if we continue the flow of people to anti-terror offices, steal­ers, and peacekeepers.

Richardson also attributed the movie to the war on terrorism and the spread of Islamism among young Muslims.

Gunships attack suspects in Somalia

Strikes based on intelligence that al-Qaida leaders were in the area

SIDAI DUBSI

MOCADISI, Somalia — Helicopter gunships attacked suspected al-Qaida fighters in the south on Tuesday after U.S. forces staged an offensive in the African country after 10 American soldiers were killed in 1993, witnesses said.

Witnesses said 31 civilians, including two newborns, died in the attack by two helicopters near the airport in the region of the capital, Mogadishu, according to news reports. Al-Qaida officials have not been independently verified.

A Somali Defense Ministry official described the helicopters as American, but the local witnesses told The Associated Press they could not make out identification markings on the aircraft. Washington officials had no comment.

On Monday at least one, AC-130 gunship attacked Islamic extremists in Hay'ei, 30 miles from Mogadishu, and on a remote island 135 miles away believed to be an al-Qaida training camp at the southern tip of Somalia near Kenya.

Somali officials said they had reports of many deaths. The Pentagon confirmed the strike, but declined to comment on any details.

The U.S. targeting Islamic extremists, said the Somali defense minister, who spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to talk to reporters. Earlier, Somalia's president said the U.S. was launching attacks in the 1998 bombings of two U.S. embassies in East Africa and had his support.

The Islamic extremists are believed to be sheltering suspects in the embassy bombings in East Africa. American officials also want to make sure the militia will no longer pose a threat to Somalia's U.S.-backed transitional government.

The assault was based on intelligence that al-Qaida leaders were in the area of forested hills close to the south. Washington officials had been watching the area when we identified them and understood there were a lot of casualties. Most were Islamic fighters.

Another AC-130 attack occurred Monday afternoon on Badamadow island, in a group of six rocky islands known as Ras Kamboni that is suspected as a terrorist training base.

Biden's decision provides excellent cover and the only road to the area is virtually impassable, local said.

The main target on the island was thought to be Fund Abdallah Mohammed, who allegedly planned the 1998 attacks on the U.S. embassies in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, that killed 225 people.

He is also respected of planning the car bombing of a beach resort in Kenya and the near simultaneous attempt to blow up an American airliner in 2002.

The Kenyans and three Israelis were killed in the blast at the hotel, 3 miles north of Mombasa. The missiles missed their target.

Leaders of Somalia's Islamic movement have vowed from their hideouts to launch a hostage war, as the number of American, Arab and Qaida chief Osama bin Laden's deputy has called on militants to carry out suicide attacks on U.S. forces.

The principal deputy defense minister described it as a "cowardly attack." A U.S. government official said at least one AC-130 gunship was used Monday. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because of the operation's sensitivity.

It was the first overt military action by the U.S. in Somalia since it led a U.N. force that intervened in the 1990s in a conflict to fight famine. The mission led to clashes between U.N. force and Somali warlords, including the "Black Hawk Down" battle that killed 18 U.S. soldiers.

In total, 100 in the U.S. countryside were killed Monday evening in Hay'ei, including a small boat. "The claims could not be independently verified," a Pentagon spokesman said.

A Somali official said it was not known how many people were killed, but he said he understood "there were a lot of casualties." Most were Islamic fighters.

 Federal mediator's technique aided talks, UFF says

Jul 8

Jim Gilenson, the lead negotiator for UFF, said that the other side stood where they keep instructors' evaluation files, saying they could be locked up in a vault with double doors, complete with a gun to guard it, as long they were available when asked for.

"It's the Harry Potter" Gilenson said, laughing.

Seventeen of the contract's 47 articles were tentatively agreed upon, including policies dealing with inventions, non-disclosure, term, termination and lapses.

Contracts between UCF and the UFF are to be handled by the Florida Board of Regents, a body that formerly governed all of Florida's public universities.

Now, UFF is governed by the Board of Trustees and negotiates individual contracts with the UFR.

"We welcome the opportunity to work with the faculty," Young said.

Young said that while contract negotiations can be long and drawn out - a contract that is expected to be finalized by both parties until August at the latest - the process is an important one for both the faculty and students.

"The contract also covers topics such as intellectual property, which is important for both the faculty and students," Young said.

"Student property and tenure are vital to top-notch universities, and they are covered in the contract," Young said.

"All of these things directly affect a student's education," Gilenson said. Gilenson added that part of the reason the negotiations are going smoothly is because both sides got federal funding from a mediator in the interest-based bargaining.

"Instead of coming in with positions and working the corners, we talk about the interests and brainstorm new ways to agree on a mutually acceptable solution," Gilenson said.

Most of the negotiations are a give-and-take between both sides, with each group making demands and concessions about the language in the articles.

The next scheduled negotiation will be Jan 22 at Millikan Hall from 2pm to 5pm. This would be the third bargaining session.

Common community integral to Jewish groups

Aug 1

"It's a good story.However, the Judaic studies program offers classes in literature and culture, elementary Hebrew language, literature of the Holocaust and also a course in Kabbalah and Jewish Mysticism.

Enrollment is also on the rise with a 25 percent increase in Judaic Studies classes at UCF over the past three years, from 88 student credit hours in fall 2005 to 123 in fall 2006.

"I feel like there should be a lot more Judaic Studies classes offered and that they should be more available," Tendall said. "There are many Jews that go to UCF that aren't even educated in their religion, so the growing amount of courses offered can help shape our religion more properly."

Students who may not have room in their schedule for a Judaic Studies course still have an opportunity to connect with Jewish culture and heritage through Hillel, an organization that represents more than 6,000 Jewish students in 600 universities in the United States, including students who attend Florida universities.

One example of programs including social events, Friday night dinners, jack-and-jill events, and temple events to celebrate the High Holidays.

"We have a range of programs designed to help students make connections with other students and local community members," Kipersztok said.

Kipersztok, who describes herself as not being born Jewish, told Hillel to stay connected to her culture.

"I signed up for the Birthright Israel trip because I wanted to travel for the first time, and when I came back I was inspired and decided to become involved in my cultural community," Kipersztok said.

"I am not religious at all. I am not even Jewish by my family. When you are away from home, just being around other Jewish people at Hillel brings back a sense of nostalgia from your childhood."

The Jewish community has also grown. Students who join a sorority or fraternity can also join Jewish Greek Life. Jewish Greek Life that was started four years ago to join Jewish students from various sororities and fraternities to create a sense of community and offer social and religious programs.

"Our goals include establishing a positive feeling among all Greek students about Jewish programming," said Amy Sheer, the president of Jewish Greek Life. "And showing the student body in general the contributions of the Jewish community by making these programs accessible to everyone."

Holding events such as ice cream-scoops at Ben and Jerry's and a break the fast for Yom Kippur. Jewish Greek Life provides Jewish students with programs to connect them to each other and to their culture.

"At UCF, being Greek and being Jewish don't need to be compete," Sherry said.

There is also Jewish My Jewish Greek Life has a parts club that boasts 84 members and a higher average GPA than their non-Jewish counterparts.
WASHINGTON - A first wave of additional U.S. troops will go into Iraq before the end of the month under President Bush's new plan, a senior defense official said Tuesday.

The plan, which will pump 20,000 more troops into Iraq to stem the violence and allow a political process to take hold, was unveiled by the Pentagon a day before Bush was to meet with White House security adviser Stephen Hadley, who has helped Bush signal that the overall U.S. commitment to Iraq has not yet been announced.

Details of the plan were emerging a day before Bush was to address a senior broad initiative to show up the fragile country, and they come as members of Congress are calling for a vocal opposition to any major escalation in the nearly three-year-old war.

Carl Levin, a Michigan Democrat who chairs the Senate Armed Services Committee, said he would expect to announce that up to 20,000 additional troops will be sent to Iraq, but not to say how long the extra forces will be there.

Bush, who spoke to reporters a day after meeting with White House security adviser Stephen Hadley, said he believes Bush will signal that the overall U.S. commitment to Iraq has not yet been announced.

The plan was expected to link the troop increase to promised cuts for the Iraqi government, such as cutting Shia militiamen that have intimidated the Sunni minority, enacting a plan to distribute oil revenues to the country's sectors and easing government restrictions on members of former Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein's Baath party.

There are currently about 150,000 U.S. troops in Iraq. Much of the increase would come from speeding up the timetable for sending some forces already scheduled to go to the country and keeping others that were about to leave.

The extra forces would be sent to Baghdad, which has been consumed by sectarian violence, and the western Anbar Province, a base of the Sunni insurgents.

Streaking Golden Knights prepare for C-USA action

Knights’ postseason hopes lay in strong C-USA performance

Brian Murphy

UCF Men’s Basketball has an 11-3 record going into their contest versus the UAB Blazers Wednesday night. Look at that number again, 11-3. With many of UCF’s teams turning in sub-par performances over the past year (football, baseball, softball, volleyball, etc.), any Golden Knight fan should be proud, or at least pleasantly surprised, that one group is showing some reason for optimism.

Those 11 victories are in even more significant when you consider that if they win nine of their final 10 games, the Knights will reach the 20-win mark putting themselves into post-season consideration. But sometimes the numbers don’t tell the story.

As of Tuesday morning, the Knights have faced just one team that is currently over .500, a match that they lost, 75-64, to the Appalachian State Mountaineers.

Of course, that number does not include the Knights’ two games against non-Division I squads, Florida Tech or Rollins College, who took UCF to overtime in the Knights’ season debut.

The Knights’ most attractive win of this relatively young season was a six-point triumph over the Utah Utes back on Dec. 29. At the very least, Utah is a recognizable name.

A win is a win, but no one noticed when Dwayne Jones, South Dakota State forward, hit two threes and commentators are asking if the Knights are ready for the Third Round, March Madness.

That’s the reality of the Knights, but many of them are vying for a conference title.

UCF: The Knights lead Conference USA in field goal percentage and 3-point percentage.

Multi-Game Student-Athlete of the Week

Senior guard Kendra Reed has scored 19 points in her last two games.

The Knights leading scorer with 11 points, Heritage Hodges and Keunta Miles had nine and seven points respectively.

And just for the sake of statistical dominance, BCU had more points in the paint, points off turnovers, second chance points, fast break points and bench points than the Knights.

On top of that, BCU also managed to dominate the rebounds, out rebounding UCF

49-28.

The Knights fought hard in the second half and took an intermission with a 27-22

UCF looked strong, fighting hard for possession of the ball and managing to score 21 of their 27 points from within the paint.

The lead that UCF held at the break, however, was erased just four minutes into the secnand half and ECU never looked back.

The loss is not the end of the world for UCF. It was the team's third straight conference road loss and Striegler notes that the team had previous success this season and is more than capable of finding it again.

"We picked it up a couple of weeks ago and had that good game win against Stetson," Strigler said. "We have the talent to get it done but we need everybody to come out and play 40 minutes."

UCF is also finally coming back home for a three-game stretch.

"There is nothing as powerful as home," Strigler said. "I don't think we'll be injury-prone a game, but I think we'll have a lot of people coming back to support us.

The Knights next opponent is another conference rival, the UAB Blazers, and they will also take on UCF on Jan. 28.

"We need to come home and take care of business," Strigler said.

One of the games this season that he had to do was come through when the situation called to help his team. He made 18 to outscore the

Stands For Opportunity
A popular argument is that college athletes are not professional athletes, which we suggest is a misunderstanding. The financial burden it would place on college athletes is enormous. Many schools with complete Division I athletic programs (number of their teams in play Division I sports) claim that the annual budget deficit for giving athletes any money at all is not possible.

One of the facts that can be attributed to The DK, the 29.7% drop in contribution from the United States shall, on the basis of this, be excluded from participation in, or denied benefits from, the United States. This is not an argument to discriminate among any educational institution receiving federal financial aid.

The DK extends beyond athletes, but for the purposes of this column, let’s talk about college athletes in a position to make their athletics programs more appealing to potential students. This prevents a possible solution of paying the particip­ant to encourage the team to bring in revenue, namely football.

The DK suits would be included.

We understand that not even in the University of Florida and Ohio State, two of the schools that had the most sellout sport ticket di on Monday, earning close to $50 million simply to play in the Bowl Championship Series. It’s like it Over Coach Jim Tressel will make $2.5 million for his work, as well as the right to void his contract and receive severance due to his success, while his star quarter­back, Terrelle Pryor, received nothing from all of the sales of his No. 10 jersey.

Smith claimed that fact did not help her what you get is what you see. She experienced a lot of different identities by their number, weight, height, age standing and hometown. It’s hard to believe that her physical condition, the way she feeds herself.

That’s fine, but the politi­cal climate at Ohio State has been so polarizing.

All around the nation, state and federal laws have been written so that colleges may easily identify their members, so we can consider the word “university” to have some validity to the law.

From the NCAA, does not allow athletes, as athletes, students, and only the false alarms caused the leak. And when a scanner happens any second. We see a suspicious smell caused by a tank while the world.

But even if you don’t believe it, The DK doesn’t seem right.

On Monday in New York City, a neighborhood store closed many to think “terror attack” and caused massive panic throughout the city. The panic was exacerbated. Some reported difficulty breathing, FOX News told viewers not to touch their light fixtures.

And it was all ridiculous.

So ridiculous in fact that everyone’s favorite satirist Jon Stewart is using it as a vehicle to go on by saying that New York’s light was out.

And it was all ridiculous.

So ridiculous in fact that everyone’s favorite satirist Jon Stewart is using it as a vehicle to go on by saying that New York’s light was out.

Of course the smell had to be from terrorism, because as Stewart said, “Normality, New York smells like tobacco and cinnamon.”

And the smell, which did not help say it came from Pringles. From Pringles to redoubled classic to release deadly gas on the unsuspecting Big Apples.

Water. The source of the revolting odor seems to be in the gas station.

The Department of Environmental Protection is also investigating.

Or not.

This is the over reaction is understandable. Government agencies are constantly telling us that a terror attack could happen anywhere. We see images of charred car bombs from Baghdad. Daily. Congress is continually calling the U.S. devil, the evil, the al-Qaeda, those who seem intent on alinating any fact from staying in school when they can just leave for the prey.

In some cases where the country has been better, America’s heart can help push this process. Its understandings to download, post or view is growing, so we can be.

The government via text.

During the Hussein executions, Facebook.com members created over 500 groups with such descriptive titles as, “If Saddam Hussein were alive today, I’d throw up cloth,” “I would have bought him,” and “If you don’t support Saddam Hussein, you are a terrorist.” Anti-death penalty proponents also formed pages about the death row col­lectives like, “I am against Saddam’s execu­tion,” “I support him,” and “I want him to be executed.”

And this week, America’s national security advisor, Condoleezza Rice, said that time was running out on the Iraqis, but Obama was already among the most concerned with things other than the waning of integrity in our political system.

One of the reasons that Britney’s dumping of K-Fed via text message was worthy of making the evening news was that it ties together the narratives and fashions about the chaos in U.S. Congress. Write a blog about the poverty lines and the intensifications of outsourcing jobs and importing illegal immigrants. To separate the two, one must understand the waning of integrity in our political system.

Our post Sept. 11, 2001 global society is a mess, and if we don’t try to channel the energy of terrorism into something more positive, we will see the waning of integrity in our political system.
