How many students wants to spend about $32 million from October 1, 2006, to December 31, 2006, to attain and establish a Facebook account?

The idea for the event at the Che Festa comes from this year's King, Richy Lee and Phoebe, and the queen is the name of Vietnamese beef noodle soup.

What do you get when you mix muffins, red kidney beans, cilantro, salt, soy sauce and three kinds of cheese?

Young man who tangled Mario Jenkins to be sentenced today

Sentencing for the man who tangled UCF police officer Mario Jenkins in a bar in the College Town area of the UCF campus was expected to be today before Judge Charles Strong of the Orange County Courthouse.

Michael Young, 39, is facing a maximum of five years in prison, and a $5,000 fine, as well as a year of probation, stemming from the incident. He pleaded guilty to a third-degree felony charge of battery against a law enforcement officer with a weapon.

Dana Tomes, Young's attorney, expressed support for the Oct. 5, 2006, press conference that the sentence would be a light one, possibly probation or community service.

Jenkins was working undercover at a Feb. 4, 2006, concert when he was shot by an Orlando Police Department officer.

Preacher’s message strikes students’ nerves

BART ZIPF

Mickey Armstrong is no stranger to controversy. He’s only made two preaching tours at UCF, but in that brief time, he’s been both challenged by Christians and defended by atheists and become the source of entertainment and argument for many others who flock to his spot on the free assembly lawn. Yet, like it or not, Armstrong is on a mission, and he’s going to keep pushing forward.

Mickey Armstrong is a street preacher. He’s pretty easy to spot on campus — Sunscreen, a leather cap and a water jug have all become his distinguishing features. Armed with a tailored green Bible and a scrapbook — encyclopedic knowledge of its verses, he knows how to down a crowd pretty quickly.

Proclaim Films major Jen Campbell remembers the first time she encountered Armstrong.

“I was walking, I had a skirt on, and he said, ‘That girl is a whore! I kind of ran around and just turned around, and he just pointed to me.’”

Armstrong says while he sometimes exaggerates, he’s just looking to engage students.

“Just preach the Bible and you’ll get people,” he says to the crowd.

That strategy certainly seems to have worked. He’s become a phenomenon at UCF that first week in September 2006. Large groups seem to materialize as seconds around him. Fans have taken pictures with him, made homemade T-shirts saying, “what would Brother Mickey do?” and have even built a Web link for the popular college networking site Facebook.

Campbell left Armstrong after spending the day talking and arguing with him. As she walked away, she thought of how Armstrong was still battering against the world’s problems.

High-stepping with style, the African American Student Union kicked off Black History Month with the rhythmic percussive beat of drums.

The AASU began their opening ceremonies with Jones High School Marching Band at the Student Union courtyard Wednesday.

Songs of the base drums and melody grooves could be heard from as far away as the library while UCF students gathered to watch the band play the last tunes and showcase their drum routine. The bandentertained the crowd with their best of call-and-response school music, somewhat reminiscent of Florida A&M University’s marching band. “liked it! It definitely liked it,” said Michael Poy, a senior psychology major.

“It was a nice little change-up.”

The atmosphere was heavy and the crowd was hyped.

“It was a nice little change-up,” said Delaney Langley, a senior music and psychology major.

“We wanted to expose Jones High School students to an institution of higher education,” AASU president Kendra Lopez said, ”and show them that it is possible to go to college.”

According to the Florida Department of Education, Jones High School struggles with low FCAT scores and has a high dropout rate.

Coffee talk gets global and explores cultural issues

TYLER GILESPE
(Global Correspondent)

An inviting aroma of freshly brewed coffee filled the Barbara Ying Center on Tuesday as the International Services Center hosted its first Global Coffee Hour of the semester.

The casual get-together usually occurs two times a month and was established last spring. ISC organized the occasion in hopes that it would become a positive social gathering where international students could freely converse with those of the present UCF community.

"UCF has a large population of international students," said Donon, ISC director. "We decided that this would be a good and interesting way for students to get together and share ideas."

The fall 2006 enrollment at UCF for full-time, non-residential alien undergraduates and graduate students was 27 and 460, respectively.

"We looked at other programs and some schools have ten hour," Schatz said. "As a group, we decided that coffee is a little more American."

Coffee is the third most-consumed non-alcoholic beverage in America, behind soda and water. The National Coffee Association of U.S.A. reports that over 166 million people in the U.S. consumed coffee in the last year, of which 108 million were daily drinkers.

Students have shown that the beverage is high in antioxidants and that its consumption, in moderate amounts, may result in such health benefits as a lowered risk for diabetes and Alzheimer's disease. "I think people like the rich and stimulating effects of coffee," said co-campus Starbucks barista, Lindsay Horroson. "It wakes you up and keeps you going."

An ad hoc group of students and faculty members assembled and sampled each submitted entry.

"We were very impressed with the creativity, presentation, and taste. A lot of entries were large groups, but every one who attends is unique," Donon said. "The competition was a huge hit and everyone tasted the offerings."

"We have been there when there were large groups, but everyone who attends is unique," Horroson added. "The competition is open to everyone, so it was sort of hard to choose a winner." Brown said.

Helen Tran took home the champion prize for making the "new wave" of dedicating coffee. "I'm happy with the results; it was a tough call because they all kind of taste the same," Tran said.

The coffee flowed and the students and guests then around the world gather for conversations in the Barbara Ying Center.

The next Global Coffee Hour will be held on Tuesday, Feb. 13.
Preacher welcomes hecklers

Left, she decided that she would change her appearance and retain the nickname. "So I wore it, and I bought a pair of pants, and I went out there with signs that said 'no longer a 'whore' and 'Only God can judge me' and all those things. And I listened to everyone, and I argued and did a lot of debating with lots.

Armsom was an open-air preacher. He traveled across the southeastern United States with his wife Elizabeth to college campuses, spreading a brand of Christianity that angered some and stirred a nerve in many. But his students weren't always a preacher.

In college, Armsom was a competitive power lifter and held two records. He graduated in college, he majored in religion and took it as a confirmation of what Christians see to be the real people about God and about

"I always felt called to preach," he said. He became a teacher in Miami, teaching math to some of the past 30 years. He taught Sunday school and preached in prisons and occasionally at church. It wasn't until 1996 that he began to consider outdoor preachers.

"God started dealing with me this about a month ago. I was thinking maybe just sing out to a crowd one night I saw God calling me," he said. But he wasn't sure what to do, so he bought a book by evangelist Jed Smock and made a commitment that he ought to start preaching outdoors full time. He arranged to meet with his students, like freshman John McGee, who agreed.

"The truth of what he was doing never occurred in the midst of the screaming," he said. "I want to get people thinking about their salvation. People talk about you after you leave. Certainly, I've been able to make an impact there.

And there are some stu- dents, like Freshman Jeana Mercy, who agrees. "It's a disservice to the complexity of Arab-Americans in the United States," she said. "Something has to happen immediately and it really can't wait for this to happen at UCSC." This is important even if the issues by having forums like others disagreed.

"Most racial misconceptions stem from fear," Armstrong said. "Osama became this image and we relate anyone who looks like him to 9/11."

UCF's junior John Beigart and senior Eric Bruney both came out victorious in their singles competitions.

Beigart defeated Gator opponent Billy Mulligan in three sets, 6-2, 6-3, 6-1, while Bruney beat Daniel Castellanos 6-4, 6-4.

Despite his strong effort, sophomore Matthew Janutic was defeated 6-2, 6-1 by Louis Ferrer.

Junior Steven Lien and fellow freshman Tyler Suda defeated their opponents 8-6.

A WONDER NO MORE
John Mayer comes of age with a surprisingly mature album and heartfelt show

SEAN RANTENOWITZ

Maintaining a healthy career within the context of pop music, can be an arduous task; those seeking proof of the handicap need look no further than "Where's The Party?" the latest commendation of one such wonder.

It's a challenge compounded with elements such as: a public image, limited radio airplay, and a failing record company.

However, about midway through his solo set at the Oviedo Avenue on Saturday, Mayer showed that he is far from finished yet, offering a moment of transcendence during a satisfying acoustic guitar solo on "Heartbreak." A purely electric song off Mayer's latest album, Continuum.

Continuum is up for five Grammy Awards, including Album of the Year and Best Pop Vocal Album with good reason.

Mayer walked a fine line between pop-star, self-conscious facet (along with all of his goofy tracking) and soulful acoustic rooted in the history of blues and rock.

Mayer's finally delivered the album that those in the know always suspected he was capable of.

Showering a richly textured production aesthetic in his impeccable chops as a guitarist, Continuum is an album that speaks volumes with subtlety and sincerity, but also for beyond its years.

Mayer's simply chose a live setting, an ideal environment to experience the music and emotion of the cabinet.

Backed by a seven-piece band, Mayer ran through an hour-and-a-half set that touched mostly on his new material, with honey songs like "Virginia," and the hopeful track "Dance in the Luminescent Room." Introducing his new material.

The impressive tight play of the rhythm section was matched only by Mayer's5:50.

MOVIE TIMES

AMANDA K. SHAPIRO

Armed with former members of Spock and Queen City Knights, Damier started off consisting of talent with the DIY ethos characteristic of punk rock.

The New York natives spent years every waking moment of the past two years mastering and crafting their band and sound.

The objective was to create and implement musical ideas that were abundant and boundless.

The final result was a 16-track debut album titled "Misfire".

The album was released live on "Island Vision" records.

Damier's influences span many genres, which is clearly inspired on their experimental debut release.

The debut contains an unconventional song structure, replacing the traditional guitar solo.

The album is the embodiment of a prog-rock revival, strutting foot on musical foundations established by the movement's precursors, but it adds a sharp detail.

The band does not like audiences their daily dose of funk. The relationship between jazz, melodies and bass fans can carry the music.

Equally impressive is the dominant feel of playing with multiple tempos.

Damier's heavy use of rhythm section separates their music from the majority of modern mainstream rock.

The album's most noteworthy track is "Departure.

The drum instrumental piece evokes the feeling of dissonance with its resonating riffs.

Damier's lyrics seem to parallel the human thought process through streams of consciousness.

The words are scattered and unbalanced, yet every now and again, they come together to express a closer thought.

The vocals sound stressed, yet far surpasses what he thought.

The band will play in Rock House on March 10 for a tour with MUNNEN and Familia.

When you live in a humid state like Florida, it's almost impossible to avoid the frizz and fans of a bad hair day.

But there are simple and fashionable tricks that designers are bringing to the masses that can help fight frizz or just jazz up an old hairstyle.

And the headband, a simple hair accessory that is very popular in the modeling world and on campus, is doing just that.

Headbands can be made of hard plastic, fabric-covered material, or they can be glass, gold, or silver sabers.

According to the "Spring Beauty Runway Report" in the January 2007 issue of Harper's Ranier magazine, hair accessories, like headbands, were "the crowning glory to many designer creations" for the spring season.

RalphLauren New York Fina, who gave the runway models at a Valentine's fashion show the headband look, said, "Women are looking for ways to spice up their hair without cutting it, and a headband lets you look neat and grounded, even in extreme humidity and when you're pressed for time."

Melissa Laurench, a 21-year-old freshman, wears her headband that she bought in New Orleans because she is growing out her hair.

"It used to be real short."
