Possible gunfire at Pegasus Landing

A guest followed by rapid footsteps was heard by a Pegasus Landing resident Tuesday, prompting police to search the area and temporarily close Pegasus Landing Road.

Police armed and closed the area after a student called and told the officer was light outside her door. Police also got an additional phone call complaining about the sound.

The UCF Police Department and Seminole County Sheriff's Office shut down the road, convened the area, and searched for evidence.

However, nothing was found that indicated a gun had been fired. Q.James Rose with UCPD and the police could have been caused by something other than a gun.

Hero champ is an axe angel

A recent Duke grad has found a way to solve the age-old problem of getting a beer up to your balcony.

After some trial and error, Amanda Bartels, 32, found a way to get beer up to her balcony.

“I was able to walk away as the true hero,” Bartels said Tuesday after winning the highest prize in the competition.

Tuesday was a night that was all about the freedom of the balcony.

Some students filled the balconies with beer, canned beer up to their balconies.

Amanda Bartels, 32, drove around McCulloch Road Tuesday, prompting UCF Police to close the area.

The noise was heard by Bartels, who was able to walk away as the true hero.

Contestants pulled out all the stops from stage diving to climbing up balconies. The one who won the crowd’s hearts and the championship was an angel.

Adorned with red wings and a black headdress, Amanda Bartels, 32, showed all the way from Port Landaide to downtown Orlando to participate in a night that was "out of this world.

Bartels won the judges with her overall stage presence. At one point, in true rockstar fashion, Bartels stood up in the crowd and danced.

"We don’t have to take their clothes off to win," said Cindy Lundberg, 26, Church Booth door manager. "The Girls sing the siren, who look their clothes off and they lose. She was a better guitar player, a better performer and fan-".

In fact, the boys were more impressive.

NASA fires astronaut

A 20-year-old Florida State University student was fired from NASA Wednesday. A reporter verified that the student, who was not identified, was fired from NASA because he was a user of social media sites.

Nowak's dismissal will not affect the space agency's control in her home state, unless NASA is asked to do so.

If Nowak is a civil servant, NASA would have the ability to control her administrative leave, without any immediate action. The charges are not resolved, said NASA spokesman James Kaufeld. In Houston, but he's not an official, those options are not available.

Nowak, a 20-year-old radio-television major and member of the class of 2010, was suspended for two years. She was suspended for a year because she violated NASA's code of conduct.

Showcased films may move on to score big bucks at grand finale

NITYAM GANTI

You may have seen some strange activities taking place on campus the last couple weeks, but don't be alarmed.

Students stuck laty classrooms, talked around campus in their underwear, chased by someone in a large gorilla suit and fished sex jokes in both hall rooms, all for the Campus Moviefest.

Eighty teams competed for 1,200 University of Central Florida students participated in the first-ever Campus Moviefest, the world's largest student film festival.

On Monday afternoon, the top films were shown at Backstage Diner.

The top five finalists for CSMF's Best Picture Award were announced and then the winner, 'Tough Coll,' took home video dies. 'The Very Puny Award went to The Dell and The Turner Classic Movie Short Film Award went to Brevitte.

The festival was the first of its kind for UCFSF. It was the first time a Florida public university had participated in the festival.

'At least a great success,' Campus Activities Board Cinema Director Jeff Christodoulou said. 'It was above and beyond the number we expected.'

Students who signed up for the film festival; first received an Apple Corp. laptop, digital video camera, editing programs and technical support from CSMF. Guidelines for submission were simple: one movie, five minutes and one week to make it.

'It's very stressed, but the end result is worth it,' said Audrey Adair, a 20-year-old radio-television major and an actress in the film "Blitz." A six-day shoot was "almost" convenient because a lot of major film competitions are in 30 to 40 hours.

Many students spent a majority of the week working out the creative process and spent only a day or two of actual shooting and editing.

'Once we finally had just one day to get all the actors together and all the crew together, we started filming that night and submitted it the next day,' said 19-year-old short filmmakers Mimi Allen. Allen produced, co-directed, cowrote and acted in the film. The Importance of Playing Belly Ball, one of the top-five finalists for Best Film.

Clips are shown during the 5 p.m. screening and were submitted so the top three days trying to get ideas and the last three days shooting and editing.

'We didn't think we were going to win,' said Sierra. 'We just thought, 'Hey, let's just send something.' We had no idea this was going to happen.'

Movies were judged by randomly selected non-professional students meuring a lack of bias. Christodoulou said. The films were judged on a 100-point scale and the top five were chosen.

'We judged on a point system based on the overall aesthetics, overall concept, creativity, storyline, sound design and then just the overall quality,' Christodoulou said.

Students, members of CABS and CSMF agreed the event was a success and exceeded many expectations.

'The event was especially for the first year,' Adair said. 'There are all these creative aspects around Orlando, and you have so much to be inspired by. So definitely think UCF is an ideal location for this competition.'

'The very funny and it's an event that UCF continues to have,' Christodoulou said. 'Hopefully next director can keep changing along with this event because it's just amazing.'

All film shorts are eligible for the Florida Grand Prize, which will be held at the Plaza Theatre on April 9, 7 p.m. Tickets are available for students.

The top film is from Rollin College, the University of Tampa and Jacksonville University will be shown. The top 20 film from this region will move forward to the national level, where all the grand prize for the janet film festival is $10,000.

For more information, visit campusmoviefest.com.

Doctoral student's research may bolster giraffes' health

During the study, "It's pleasant, sometimes, to be out here," Fewster said. "I just sort of absorb a lot of the animal behavior that I didn't have as much time to watch when I worked here as an animal keeper. It's nice just to watch them and see what's going on in their lives."

According to Fewster, Eduardo Valdes, nutritionist for the Walt Disney World Animal Program, needs to know what giraffes eat in the wild so he can provide a healthy and balanced diet for the giraffes at Disney.

"There are up to 500 species of plants recorded for the giraffe's diet, but the bulk of diet is usually made up of only a few species of trees and woody break," said Valdes. "The research into giraffe feces is done in hopes of getting a better picture of the animals consumed, according to both Fewster and Valdes."

At the start of her study, Fewster spent four weeks recording behavioral data to narrow down the eating habits of the giraffes. She then has a white utility truck on one of the Disney safari's three main exhibits, which are open during the day and sometimes at night, with a trusty driver by her side that alerts her every few minutes.

"Giraffes spend a lot of time standing," Fewster said, "chewing their cud, looking around and starting off into space."

If fewer than 100 pounds of browse per day, and not important to know what they are eating. Fewster said via email:

Fewster's dissertation attempts to apply the alpaca method, commonly used in the cattle industry, to find out what the giraffe's are eating. All plants contain alkaloids, a chain of hydrocarbons, in their stomach coating. Each plant species has a specific percentage of certain alkaloids, similar to a "fingerprint," for the most part, but indistinguishable and when extracted from the feces can be traced back to the plant species the animal consumed, according to both Fewster and Valdes.

"I use a coffee grinder to grind it on the inexpensive side. It gives me the texture that I need," Fewster said.

Fewster spent educating the public about the environment as an important and celebrated part of the Animal Kingdom experience, which she enjoys most about being an animal keeper.

Described as a "green" company by Fewster, Animal Kingdom and the Animal Kingdom Lodge give guests the rare opportunity to see giraffes as well as many other "embas­" members of their species, providing a visible connection to conserva­tion. The Disney Wildlife Conservation Fund has contributed more than $50 million, distributed among 80 projects, in more than 40 countries since the opening of Animal Kingdom, according to the DWF Web site.

A large part of conservation is educating the public in accor­dance with the Association of Zoos and Aquariums, to which Disney belongs. According to the AZA Web site, the association's "Ameri­ca's leading accrediting organi­zation of zoos and aquariums, and accredits only those insti­tutions that meet rigorous standards for animal care, education, wildlife conservation, and science."

"Giraffes evolve in pellets much like the rabbits do, but bigger, more like "Hershey Kisses," Fewster said.

"On a good day, I can collect all the samples I need in about three-to-four hours. Sometime I take me about five to six hours to get them all, one samp­le a day," Fewster said.

Fewster has yet to analyze the samples and plans to conduct more research in the summer. Much of her time, however, has been dedicated to drying and grinding the feca.
That’s what happens when you offer Nick and Zach finance. Finnegan said minutes before he went onstage. “Other- wise the other schools are stuck with just me.”

Schattgen said UCF was the biggest show so far on his tour, which is about halfway through. He has 20 or 20 shows over the course of three months but has been “really excited for this show.”

Finnegan hosted the show while other comics performed their routines. “There’s young, long-haired, witty songs and Gallifaynn’s crazy laughter and got students into a frenzy,” Finnegan said. “I’m going up and say, ‘Hey, the crowd into a thrilled stupor, and Schattgen thought CAB did an acceptable job advertising the event.”

“We definitely promoted for a week and put out as many publicity about it on Facebook,” Schattgen said. “I think we did a really good job.”

At the end of the show, Finnegan got up onstage to announce the winner of Comedy Central’s $14 scholarship. The winner, Austin Kole, has a startup business in marketing networking. He went a long way, like check his picture on the Comedy Central Web site, a Christian Finnegan CD and was invited into a drawing for a Kia Sports Car. The next event will be UCF’s Amateur Comedy Competition on April 3 held at Wackadoo’s. For more information e-mail cab@central.ufl.edu.

Several angered by “tricks” overall, despite the long lines to get in and agreed that the event was much better than the Bob Saget show last year where pandemonium broke out when students were turned away because of lack of seating.

Kole opened the show with a cloud of smoke and flashing green lights and appeared under a red sheet held by two assistants. A giant fan helped sweep confetti off the audience, adding to the effect of the trick.

“I think that’s great that one student organization can pull off the Acta,” UCF Vice President Jared Bost said. By the intermission, Kole’s tricks had left a good impression on many students.

“It’s good to see somebody of this caliber at UCF. I’m not used to seeing it at UCF,” said Kyle Israeli, UCF quarterback and senior communications major. “I didn’t know what to expect, and I was astounded by his tricks.”

The show had digital media graduate student Christian Prinzipi wondering how it was done.

“It’s my first magic show!” Prinzipi said. “I know there’s a trick behind something. I don’t know exactly what it is — something in his sleeves.”

Prior to the intermission, Kole warned the audience that the “spiritual portion” of the show would take place after the intermission. He gave students the opportunity to leave without embarrassment if they were uncomfortable. Several students took Kole up on that offer.

Carl Henderson, a management information systems major, left during the intermission. Henderson, who said he believes in God on his own terms, was upset about the show’s spiritual portion. “I definitely had a negative connection,” Henderson said. “He was kind of saying everything was prepared ahead of time.”

Henderson also told students about when he was in college and found God, “I wish I left when I had the chance. Rosenthal wrote.”

Bob Dorch, the director of operations for Kole, said that this has happened before at Kole’s performances. Because they are usually sponsored events, Dorch said they ask their sponsors to make it clear in the advertisements that Kole is a Christian. Dorch said that the program is usually sponsored by a Christian organization.

“We would never deliberately try to deceive people that we’re trying to show things of the spiritual nature.” Dorch said. “I think it’s important to think about our true purpose and about spiritual things to present.”

Some students didn’t respond well to the sermon. After the show, several students plastered the Facebook page for the event, lambasting Kole.

“This was indeed the show of an illusionist I thought I was going to see magic, and I was tricked.” versus homophobes, science major Steve Rich on the page.

Free speech accountant managing editor Rosenthal said that he was upset because the warning was vague. “I wish I left when I had the chance,” Rosenthal wrote.

Tiffany Lynch, who put together the Facebook page for Campus Crusade for Christ, took down the page after the negative feedback popped up.

“Though there were mixed reviews, there were rude people, and I removed them as no one would be offended,” Lynch said. “I removed the comments completely.”

Dorch added, in the past, if people were upset, they have refunded ticket prices for upset customers. But at UCF, the event was free.

Carnival focuses on serving community

Charitable groups receive donations from annual event

WENDY J. HUNDS

Friday.

The scent of popcorn, hot dogs and forked corn filled the air last Sunday as the Mu Beta Chapter of the Delta Sigma Theta Sorority kicked off the week carnival-style. Inflatable bounce houses, food stalls and games were scattered about Lake Claire as guests filled the pavilion for the annual Crimson and Clover Camraderie.

"This is the second year we had this event, and this year it's bigger," said Adolphi Lamishane, a Delta Sigma Theta member.

Small donations were accepted upon entrance and guests participated in a variety of activities such as face painting, balloon twisting and mask making. Frisbees, a hip-hop student dance group, and Exodus Dance Team, a ministry of University Christian Fellowship, entertained the crowd.

Guests received brochures and pamphlets about HIV/AIDS prevention and goods such as pens, folders and flers.

"I think it is a really good event," said Aleta Gaskin, a sophomore advertising and promotion major. "It was a chance for students to come out and have fun." Not only were members of the university able to come out and share the event, but the chapter extended an invitation to the local community.

Tracey Roland and her son Gannon, 10, received an advertisement for the carnival on the day care and decided to attend.

"My son loves music," said of his day care and [George] Johnson wanted to come," Roland said.

Last year, the sorority held the carnival with the Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity and had a turnout of about 300. About 200 students and guests came out to support the event this year.

Although the sorority prepared for a day of fun, the group's primary focus was to serve the surrounding community.

"The donations we get will go to support three different organizations," said Leah Gibson, chairwoman of Delta Sigma Theta West 2007.

The chapter is supporting the Royal Ambassadors, the Association to Preserve the toenail Community, Inc. and Mu Iota Iota Honoring Our Senior Citizens Program.

The chapter began the Honoring Our Senior Citizens Program to acknowledge and honor senior citizens in Orlando and surrounding communities. Members of the sorority asked several churches in the area to nominate an elderly member of their congregation for the program, said Myrijah Haeger, chapter vice president.

"When the senior is selected, (the sorority) will pick up the house and take them grocery shopping and it's all on us," Haeger said.

All in all, the sorority considered the event a success.

"It exceeded our expectations," said Sabrina Thornton, a Delta Sigma Theta member. "It was a good event and a good event for us." In the upcoming weeks, the chapter will hold several events, including the Fall Ball, a homecoming class and sometimes a Catholic. A student,

Basketball season ends 53-51 to Rice

On the play, Almond was bounded by UCF guard Dave Noel, but he was able to work through traffic and get about six inches of operating room. It was enough, as he launched a 25-foot shot over Noel, falling down in the process, to give the Owls the win.

The third time was the charm for Rice guard Almond, the country's third-leading scorer. After being held to 10 points in two regular-season games against UCF specifically, Noel, the season, the senior went off for 30 points in 35-for-20 shooting. He grabbed eight rebounds on Thursday.

UCF pitching leads Knights in wins

UCF pitching was so dominant against Rice on Thursday: Junior Brett Bordwine got a career-high 14 strikeouts and allowed only four hits by junior Brett Bordwine when he struck out a career-high 14 batters over 6 2/3 innings. He allowed only four hits and didn't give up a run in the Knights' 5-2 victory over Northeastern (C-USA).

"Great performance it really was," UCF coach Jay Bergman said. "I was so proud of him, so happy for him. Bordwine got out to a rough start when we walked the first two batters of the game. After a visit from pitching coach Craig Cozart, Bordwine settled down. "Fast off to a shaky start," Bordwine said. "I got out of my mechanics a little bit, and coach Cozart came out there and just told me to relax, and everything would take care of itself." Bordwine struck out the next batter, Mike Tarnos, and got a terrible play from catcher Brandon Romane when he threw out David Gustafson trying to steal third on the same play.

The 14 strikeouts for Bordwine were the most by any Knights pitcher since 2003, when Tim Bascomb recorded 17 strikeouts.

Bordwine attributed most of his success to the context he had over his shoulder: "As long as I can command the slider in the zone and get ahead with that and then the slider sets up the fastball," Bordwine said.

Even with the mound-epoch pitching from Bordwine, the game was still in doubt at Northeastern's starting pitcher, Matt Long, was putting up a pretty good outing of his own. McDonald had allowed just one run on three hits.

Named for a fabled beast, Chimaira's spit-fire act rocked the No Fear tour

AMANDA K. SHAPIRO
Staff Writer reminded the House of Blues why it needed extra security Tuesday night after the stage lights were lit for only three minutes.

At last, six dark figures emerged from behind the curtains — exciting screams so loud that the scene could be mistaken for a battle field. Chimaira did not welcome fans with a typical greeting. Instead, they began slashing their way right into the first title release off their new album, Reurrection.

Chimaira's set list featured the perfect mix of old and new material. The biggest response from the crowd came when the band played "Power trip" and "Nothing Remains," songs off of The Impossibility of Reason and Chimaira's self-titled albums.

Fans echoed the band's dark and angry lyrics; most chanting them at key points in the songs. Committed to showing their support for the musicians, fans lined up outside of the House of Blues as early as 2 p.m. for a show that wouldn't begin until around 7:15 p.m.

Some fans who were desperate to find extra tickets surrounded the box office and begged. Most were willing to pay extra for tickets to the sold-out concert.

When fans were interviewed about seeing the band live and if they'd bought the new album, all coherent answers were drowned out by shouts of excitement.

Once he was pulled aside, Chimaira fan Fernando Rodriguez had the chance to tell his story. Rodrigues drove more than seven hours from his hometown to wait another five hours outside of the House of Blues.

When asked if he had a favorite album, Rodrigues said picking just one was like "trying to pick your favorite sister!"

About two weeks into the seven-week-long No Fear Music Tour, Chimaira graced Orlando with their presence for what they would later deem the best show of their tour.

Celtic lore finds home in UCF's Shapeshifter

TAYLOR GILLESPIE Staff Writer

A haunting tale of love lost and the importance of self acceptance was portrayed beautifully through Shapeshifter, the UCF Black Box Theatre's latest production.

The play is set in the isolated region of the Orkney Islands, an island chain off the coast of Scotland. Belinda Gilmour, UCF professor and show director for Walt Disney World, doubled as director and dialect coach.

Shapeshifter, played by Brittany Grass's Midge was the most notable performance. Midge the legend of the selkie, a mysterious woman, resembles Midge's mother, mourns the death of her water. Because of the play's location, actors had to speak in pronounced old-Irish accents.

Film basks in blood & beauty

WILLIAM GOSS
Staff Writer

The legendary battle of Thermopylae gets a ravishing modern update, thanks to graphic novelist Frank Miller of Sin City fame and director Zack Snyder, who previously directed 2004's Dawn of the Dead remake.

King Leonidas (Gerard Butler) opts to defy the laws of the elders and leads 300 of his finest Spartan soldiers to take on the seemingly endless forces of invading Xerxes (Rodrigo Santoro).

Meanwhile Leonidas' queen (Lena Headey) clashes with corrupt politicians in an effort to send support to her husband and his troops.

Using digital technology and an admirable faithfulness to its source material, Snyder takes an age-old swords-and-sandals tale and modernizes it for a generation raised on Sin City and Red Bull, with touches of wry gallows humor spread throughout sequences of equal-opportunity eye candy: plenty of flesh for the girls and plenty of blood for the guys.

Relevant political and sexual themes are there for those eager to find them, but otherwise, Butler and company manage to make a story that is as purely visceral as it is visual, in spite of the inherently artificial filmmaking techniques and storytelling embellishments inevitably accumulated across time.

Underneath its spectacular shall is the ultimate underdog story, one that embraces brotherhood, pride and honor in the face of death, standing once more in humanity's face than one might expect with any amount of glee. Yes, it's graphic and gratuitous and more than meets the line of orchestral.

It's a lie for everyone. However, those willing to watch will find that 300 is a love letter to pop art, a glorious indelible that transitions into a grand testament to our timelessness to masculinity and the downright cocky history lesson in quite a while.

Perhaps it's finally time to commend that "new classic" label from TNT because someone can finally show them what one of those would really look like.
