Professors debate death penalty issue at UCF
Discussion weighs justice against costiness

JOANNA BLACKSTONE

Two professors debated the controversial issue of the death penalty Thursday afternoon in the Student Union. The event was organized by the Student Government’s Student Affairs Committee and the National Organization for the Reform of Criminal Justice.

The two professors discussed the moral, ethical and legal implications of capital punishment. They also examined the effectiveness of the death penalty in preventing crime and the financial cost of maintaining death row inmates.

UCF criminal justice professor Robert Bohm took the opposition position, arguing that the death penalty is not an effective deterrent to crime and is a costly and resource-intensive form of punishment.

“My contention tonight is that there is no real reason to support the death penalty, and there are many reasons to oppose it,” Bohm said.

Hecker, a Harvard Law School graduate, is not only a frequent commentator for national media such as CNN, CourtTV and PBS, but has also spent years defending convicted killers.

There is a huge value to the death penalty that I became aware of when I spent time with death row inmates, and that is it is a very important symbolic statement when we condemn someone to death,” Blackstone said.

Bohm, who has served as an expert witness in three death penalty cases, argued that one reason the death penalty should be abolished is because of the cost.

“The death penalty, as admirable as it may seem, is wasteful and expensive,” Bohm said.

Low-interest Perkins Loan may be eliminated by 2008

ASHLEY LEE

Congress could take action to eliminate the Federal Perkins Loan after the Office of Management and Budget submitted an unofficial, but highly influential, report which would have fewer options for UCF students looking to fund their education.

The elimination of the Federal Perkins Loan is being pushed by people who believe the capital gains and stock options people get after they leave college are better use of scarce federal funds. This is not a new idea, like other budgetary cutbacks, but it has come to public attention in the last two years in a series of budgetary proposals.

Don't freak about finals

JORDAN FARMER

After barely passing every previous test in anatomy, Lindsey Johnson, who took the class for fun, studied more diligently than ever. She was sure that his next test would be a runaway pilot—the beginning of a more successful half-semester.

"For two weeks, I studied. On test day probably two-three hours a day," Johnson said. "It was a lot of information that I didn't understand. I really focused on studying for this test and was so stressed out about it—all my other classes were on the background.

Johnson approached the test day with confidence, taking all the time he needed and thinking he had picked all the correct answers. Then, he panicked.

As students come back from spring break and commence the leg of the academic year, they gear up to finish term papers and study for final exams. Professors and tutors continue to help alleviate the stress and improve study methods. But what strategies and habits can lead to a new academic chapter of success?

Johnson, like many students, actually had the urge to take a class he was truly interested in. "After I learned something new, but the rigor scared me back," like many students, Johnson might have reached out to a professor, and had the proper ways to prepare for the take exams.

"I noticed that the professor there had been the field for 10 years and I thought it was something I would enjoy," Johnson said. "Before I had only studied a couple of years and I thought I would do well in this class, but I was wrong."

Miles, who has taken anatomy before, said that his next test would be a harder test and he was scared to death. Miles said, "I really didn't feel prepared and I think he had picked all the incorrect answers. Then, he panicked.

Senators question Gonzales' credibility in prosecutor firings

WASHINGTON: Republican support for Atty. Gen. Alberto Gonzales shrunk

prosecutors.

“We have to be an attorney general who is credible and trustworthy, and if we can’t be

The bomb exploded near security offices to get within 25 miles of the station by blending in with the traffic and getting to a exit point. The police station was closed and hundreds of Iraqi security

Take time to reduce your stress than his study methods. "If you're studying three, four hours the night before a test, you're just going to get wound up," Johnson said. "It didn't work for me." Vazquez said that stress can also play a major, and sometimes bigger, role in doing poorly on tests. "If you get really stressed out, try to do something to keep your mind off it," Vazquez said. "Some people, if they have like a boyfriend or girlfriend, and they're really close to them, give them a call and just stay on the phone for a while." Vazquez also recommends renting a movie and says that doing so has helped her to push aside stress-inducing studies more than once. Instead of intensive study with infrequent distractions, some students find that taking it easy while studying can dissu stress all together. Vazquez agreed that pacing is very important. "If I get really frustrated because I don't understand something, I'll give it a while, and then I'll come back," Vazquez said. "Maybe even the next day, because after a good night's sleep you can come back fresh and look over the stuff. And then you will realize some things that you didn't before." In hindsight, Johnson concurred. "Good advice would be to study early and to do it in a way that won't get you worried about it," he said. "Early you have to start to not worry about the test at all, I would recommend that. Do some stretching, relax and don't cram." Johnson felt that his failure had more to do with procrastination than anything else. Once he decided to talk with a professor about the problem, he started to do better. For students who have a difficult time taking that first step — starting to study — Miles has one piece of advice: "Every student should have this mantra for when they are unable to begin studying, and I know they know it because it's been shot at them from every Nike commercial. 'Just do it'."

"It was the last date on the last day of the last day it did not," Hollinger said, "and it’s incredibly every year." "I agree. It’s just really cool. But the line could be really long to get to universal," Hollinger said. "Students should worry more about the different options. It’s not a good idea." spend hundreds of millions of dollars a year on capital punishment that in the absence of this penalty, could be spent on more effective ways of dealing with the violent crime problem.

One cheaper alternative Bohm proposed was putting offenders by sentencing them to life in prison without the opportunity of parole. He said that a life sentence was estimated to cost about $1 million, as opposed to the entire capital punishment process, which in 2006 was estimated to cost between $2.5 million to $5 million.

However, Bohm stated that once a capital crime can cost much more. He said that the state of Florida reportedly spent $80 million to execute serial murderer Ted Bundy in 2000, while the federal government spent more than $100 million to execute Timothy McVeigh, the Oklahoma City bomber, in 2001.

However, Blecker defended the death penalty because "the past counts." "The fact is, some people kill so cruelly, so callously, so wantonly, with such depravity that they deserve to die," Blecker said. "We have an obligation to exercise judgment in matters of this kind as I am that my hand has been stained by their blood."

Blecker also argued that the death penalty is applied in an "arbitrarily arbitrary way" because so few people are actually executed. According to the Florida Department of Corrections, there are currently 380 people on death row in Florida. However, since the reinstatement of the death penalty in 1976, only 24 of them have been executed, four of them in 2006.

"The death penalty is nothing more than a lottery," Bohm said. "Only 1 to 2 percent of all death eligible offenders are ever executed.

Blecker said that he thought the laws needed to be reformed so that the death penalty was reserved for "the worst of the worst." "It's not nothing more than a lottery, but I do readily concede it is far from perfect. It is far from sufficiently narrow," Bohm said. "It is too broad. I am apologetic for the present death penalty regime. The statutes fail to get some who deserve to be gotten, but more importantly they sweep up many who do not deserve it.

Blecker pointed out that the courts failed to sentence Gary Ridgway, the so-called "Green River Killer" to death, even though he pled guilty to more murders than any other serial killer in American history when he admitted to murdering women in a span of two decades. Ridgway was sentenced to all life sentences in prison without the opportunity of parole.

"One reason that he was spared — and he shouldn't have been — but the reason he was spared ultimately was because the price of sparing him was put to rest tons of killings that they could not pin on him, and the locations of some bodies, and bone at this point, which they couldn't otherwise locate, and so he made the trade," Blecker said.

Blecker stated that since 1976, as many as 34 people may have been executed in error in the United States. Blecker rebutted his remarks by saying that there is inconclusive evidence. Bohm also said that because of mistakes, such as false witness accounts and false confessions, 123 people in 25 states have been released from death row after new evidence proved their innocence.

After the debate, Blecker screened his documentary of the death penalty, "The Society" is going to be present the first annual event Speakers' Corner. Bohm said he hoped the "Speakers' Society" is going to be present the first annual event.

On March 3, Florida's Commission on Administration of Lethal Injection released a report critical of the state's procedures for lethal injection. Capital punishment had been suspended since Dec. 13, 2005, when prisoner Angel Diaz took 34 minutes to die — twice the normal time — after receiving a double lethal chemical dose. After the report was released, Gov. Charlie Crist ordered an investigation of the state's methods.

"It's way too little, way too late. The price of sparing him may have been saved just a little bit toward their agreements. I think he hoped the "Speakers' Society" is going to be present the first annual event.

The UCF Men's Tennis team fought through injuries and an early deficit on their way to earning a 4-3 victory over in-state rival South Florida on Saturday.

UCF's triumphs in the first four singles matches clinched the win. Sophomore Tarek Ben Soltane with a 9-2 record, the Knights' victory was complete on the second singles court with a 3-5 win.

Senior Bauer Gunis won the next point for UCF after striking out all of 2006 with a shoulder injury. Gunis has been working on it in 2007 and has continued to struggle with shoulder and back pain and was not expected to play on Saturday.

But Gunis was forced to step in because sophomore Jenny Roew was sick. Gunis responded by beating Sieger Drolka, 6-0, 6-4.

"I am really happy for [Ender] because... he just competed the best he could against maybe not his full potential," UCF assistant coach Cushman said. "That’s really a good win for him."

A few minutes later, freshman Zoltan Beligant improvised his impressive singles record this year with a three-set victory on court three. Beligant has won nine of his last 10 singles matches and is 16-4 overall this season.

"It was a great day for us," Cushman said. "It’s going to be one of the best weekends in the country for us."

"He doesn’t get nervous when he plays a set, which is one of his greatest strengths. He’s calm... which is a great attribute for a 19-year-old or a freshman... and he’s playing like he’s a senior."

Sophomore Norman Alcantara earned the decisive fourth point for UCF on Saturday after Beligant couldn’t return, Alcantara won 7-6 in the third set. But won the next three games for a 3-6, 6-4, 6-4 victory.
