Security deadlines advanced to fall

Two security provisions being proposed by the security task force could be implemented as soon as August 15. Behind UCF Vice Adm. A.J. Harris’s head, the task force said in a meeting Thursday that many of the envisioned completion times for the provisions needed to be moved forward.

“I’m not the kind of person that likes to sit around and study these proposals until the cows come home,” Harris said. “We need to translate and integrate some of these missions right now.”

One of the measures that could be integrated by the fall involves placing placards inside buildings and classrooms. The placards would contain a number of emergency or crisis-management procedures and contact information.

“Putting the placards in buildings and classrooms will hopefully be done by August,” Harris said. “We are getting to need some work, though, and maintenance people will help put those up, so it’s not up against the fall semester.”

More immediately, the task force will be approving and issuing a sticker to be put on the back of students’ IDs. They will bear four or five emergency contact numbers and other information printed on them, Harris said.

“The doing the small things like this is easier and quicker which is why we want to have these done faster today,” he said. “The more hardwares- and infrastructure-related proposals will obviously have to be studied more, and that is why we plan to take longer to implement.

All of the proposals have to follow strict guidelines set by the National Incident Management System, NIMS, a branch of the Department of Homeland Security, Harris said.

Jana, 19, accepting major and Gonda's roommate, "It wasn't even raising when falling in the roof." Brightfield by the flash. Concord checked to make sure her roommate's name was Gonda. "It was that scary," Concord said. "We went to look, and there was fire on the roof. Then we knocked on doors (for the third floor area or emergency) and the fire alarm were off." The fire alarm were off in the apartment below the lightening strike.

Another summer from mood, Laddle walked up the stairs to find Concord and said again knocking on his door. By this time the fire blanketing by the heavy metal that followed the lightning strike, no longer seemed to be a problem.

He then went into his apartment looking forward to a show; when the fire fixed up again, accompanied by heavy knocking from Concord and Conari on his door.

"I just want to take a show," Laddle said, looking around for someone of authority in the crowd that had gathered to watch the firefighters work.

"I tried to talk to the fire department and select if the fire was out, and they holy saying possibly—probably—only wanted that started with it," Laddle said. "What's that supposed to mean?"

UCF Housing and Residence Life and Penn State Apartments management said they would find the residence of the damaged apartment place to stay if the damage made the apartment unavailable, said Zonsalis. Gomolko, student with the office of News and Information. After an hour of waiting, Laddle and Kimrei were told they had 30 minutes to collect whatever they needed for the night. Permanently transfer to another apartment due to smoke and water damage would be discussed later.

Her favorite character is Obi-Wan Kenobi. Another MGM Studios employee said that most of the Star Wars fans came out earlier this month, since this past weekend was last the weekend for MT 777.

Tortoises susceptible to lung disease

Bernard is in the beginning phases of a project to investi­gate the presence of lung disease in campus horto­sises.

The gopher tortoise, now called a keystone species, is Bernard's focus. They have a large size, Bernard has noted, which makes it easy to track their routes.

"I'm thinking that it is the natural history of tortoises," Bernard said.

It's been the gopher tortoise's time to die. The gopher tortoise, which has sp1ked recent debate on developable land, is a keystone species. This makes it highly transmissible among tortoises, Bernard explained.

Using CREOL Pond as an example, Bernard has noted that a tortoise has been in and out of the pond, and it appears that it is looking at health issues, such as population density and also the size of the current population. Bernard explained that a permit to track their routes.

"The gopher tortoise project is one in a million projects that we're doing in the community," Bernard said. "Whether they're listed or not, there's equal importance as to the habitats that they're associated with. So the gopher tortoise project is one in a million projects that we're doing to protect native habitats and native ecosystems.

Changes threaten school's spirit

A little over a year ago, UCF's administration and athletics department took a step, a colossal one, that put this university on the map. UCF became a high profile, highly competitive athletic program.

The construction of an on-campus football stadium, the hiring of a head coach and the creation of a new logo sent a message to the nation. Anybody could see that UCF was becoming a serious player in college football. The Blue Streaks were the latest in a line of college football programs that followed the plan of having a school construct a new stadium as a way of improving the football program.

Nearly three months ago, however, UCF took 10 giant steps back when they announced a logo-redesign and the deletion of "Blue" from our school's athletics teams.

I've been mulling over this since I laid eyes on the new logo. I've been trying to convince myself that I've over exaggerated. Maybe the new logo will just get overlooked. Maybe nobody will notice it.

Maybe, but I don't think so. True fans notice. They believe in this school's tradition. OR, OR, I know What tradition? That's the point. UCF can't expect to gain credibility or a high profile, highly competitive athletic program if you can't even grow a thick skin and pretend that you're the real deal, because they desperately need to start turning potential into wins.

This was the real deal, the logo-redesign and the deletion of "Blue." Nobody noticed. UCF administrators just went about their business as if nothing had happened. The new logo, the new logo-redesign and the deletion of "Blue" from our school's athletics teams.

The Gators didn’t even win a game in their first season of 1994, but they improved to 29-25 the next year, 36-22 in 1996. Now, they are 35-2 and have played in three straight Southeastern Conference championships.

For a program that is just 11 years old and has been in the conference for only 10 years, the Gators have been a revelation. They have captured two SEC championships, including last season, and are in their first College World Series.

“The thing that impresses me about this team is how much they have grown and matured,” said Coach Steve Spurrier. “They have been through a lot and have handled it well.”

But the Gators are not satisfied. They want to win a national championship and they believe they have the talent to do it.

“I think we have the talent to do it,” said senior catcher Jamey Carroll. “We just have to put it all together and play our best game.”

The Gators have a balanced offense with five starters hitting over .300 and a strong pitching staff led by ace Pat Keppeler. Keppeler, a junior, has a 1.50 ERA and 10 saves and is expected to be a top pick in the Major League Baseball draft.

For the Gators to win the national championship, they will have to face some tough teams. They will likely face either Arizona or Florida State in the College World Series.

But Spurrier is confident that his team can do it.

“I think we have a better team than any other team,” he said. “We have the talent and experience to get it done.”
After our three-tent enclave was set up, we were quickly greeted by fellow campers who approved of our setup, saying we "know how to party!"

AMANDA E. SHAPIRO San Francisco

Dolores O'Riordan has been released back into the wild, only this time she is unaccompanied by her familiar bandmates, The Cranberries.

It has been four years since the band's hiatus through one member has gone on to pursue solo musical careers. Seizing her turn, O'Riordan decided to record her musical comeback after having spent a few years out of the limelight.

Released on Sanctuary Records, the album features 12 tracks very near and dear to the Irish songwriter. The making of the album differed for the radio veteran, those now-20-year-old industry experiences have involved showing her talent to the world.

"It was the first time in my life I was a first artist. I had no inhibitions, which is how it felt when I first started out. That's still visible here," says O'Riordan of her solo album.

O'Riordan's voice with her apart from other female vocalists in much of the same way that Shakespear's voice has the infectious pitch modulation.

Though she appears independent of her band on Abre Ye Ye, the album still sounds like something The Cranberries could have released. Score for the extremely personal lyrical content, there is a consistent familiarity among the melodies that lend itself to the early '90s and The Cranberries' Everybody Else Is Doing It, Why Can't We?

This is not to discredit the newly solo artist, but to further the point that the music is in its trademark voice. Let's be honest, the "I'm vanilla" wouldn't have played anywhere near as well had it been sung by someone else. The same can not sadly be made with O'Riordan's new material.

O'Riordan's voice with her apart from other female vocalists in much of the same way that Shakespear's voice has the infectious pitch modulation.

The mark of success was running that thing down the ramp in from 8,000 people," Byrd said.

The team's two goals come into play were that there be a minor tail wind and the pilot stay in his seat to control the direction of the craft. These goals could have led the team to the podium. "A little tail wind would be good, but this thing catches air really well. So, we don't want to fly into the side," team member Rick Brown said.

The wind was non-existent to be found when the craft took the stage.

The sombrero was not cooperating; Coaden hit the water well ahead of his craft. Flight rules state that the distance is measured where the pilot hits the water, whether in the craft or not.

"Did you see him bail out? we warned him," Byrd said, "It wasn't supposed to happen. It did, and it is funny." Five feet or 300 feet, the Soaring Gonzales traveled with the support of family friends and other UCF students.

These goals could have led the team to the podium. "A little tail wind would be good, but this thing catches air really well. So, we don't want to fly into the side," team member Rick Brown said.

The wind was non-existent to be found when the craft took the stage.

"Don't fall out," we warned him. His stay with the craft at all times," Lewark said of the Soaring Gonzalez's pilot, Daniel Coaden.

The sombrero was not cooperating; Coaden hit the water well ahead of his craft. Flight rules state that the distance is measured where the pilot hits the water, whether in the craft or not."

"Did you see him bail out? we warned him," Byrd said, "It wasn't supposed to happen. It did, and it is funny." Five feet or 300 feet, the Soaring Gonzales traveled with the support of family friends and other UCF students.

"The flight of success after the riff val goers, anxious to get home, powered flight fuels Flugtag, performance of the festival, for German for lyrical simple action: human powered flight deck."

Byrd said. "The team's two goals come into play were that there be a minor tail wind and the pilot stay in his seat to control the direction of the craft. These goals could have led the team to the podium. "A little tail wind would be good, but this thing catches air really well. So, we don't want to fly into the side," team member Rick Brown said.

By all these means, the video game industry will finally fulfill its own standards. It’s a monumental moment worth getting excited about, and it’s one we’ve all been waiting for. Video games now also come in a variety of forms and genres, ranging from simple puzzles to complex adventures. This diversity has allowed for the creation of games that cater to different audiences and preferences. Moreover, the integration of advanced technologies, such as virtual reality and augmented reality, has brought a new level of immersion and interactivity to the gaming experience. With these advancements, the video game industry has not only expanded its reach but has also opened up new possibilities for creativity and storytelling. In fact, some games have even been recognized for their artistic merit, earning critical acclaim and awards. This has helped to elevate the status of video games as a legitimate form of entertainment and art. However, despite these notable accomplishments, the video game industry still faces many challenges. One of the most pressing issues is the lack of diversity in gaming. Many games are targeted towards a specific demographic, leaving behind other groups who may not feel represented. Additionally, the industry must also address concerns around addiction, particularly among children and young adults. While video games can provide a source of entertainment and even therapeutic benefits, excessive or problematic playing can lead to negative consequences. It is essential for the industry to implement responsible and ethical practices to ensure that gamers can enjoy their video games in a safe and healthy manner. In conclusion, the video game industry has come a long way since its early days. With the introduction of new technologies and the rise of independent developers, the industry has become more diverse and inclusive. However, there is still much work to be done to address the challenges facing the industry, particularly in regards to addiction and representation. The industry must continue to evolve and adapt to meet the changing needs of gamers, while also ensuring the well-being of its users.
