Honor's residence towers above rest

AMANDA PEAVY

Honors students searching for a new place to live and learn may not have far to look.

Tower Three, located near the new Arena on the north end of campus, can house about 500 students, from freshmen to seniors.

The tower will also be home to about 200 Honors College students, making it UCF's third living-learning community.

"Students are living with their peers who are in some of the same courses, so they are able to study more effectively and connect with students who have similar interests or academic goals," said Meredith Varner, assistant director of UCF Housing and Residential Life.

"It's a great opportunity to learn from others," she said.

Honor's scholars can also participate in the Resident Assistant program, which offers leadership and professional development opportunities.

Two floors of Tower Three will be reserved for honors residents. The remaining floors will be open to all incoming freshmen.

"This is a great way to come together and create a community," Varner said.

Next month, a student carrying a virus might try to shake your hand.

As noted in a recent study, the UCF Health Center will launch a campaign to promote good hygiene and prevent the spread of disease.

"We want to remind everyone about the importance of washing their hands," said Dr. Joel Novick, associate director of Health and Student Affairs.

The campaign will be launched in mid-September and will continue throughout the fall semester.

No colds will be tolerated in this house!" Novick said.

"We want to make sure that everyone is following proper handwashing techniques.

GRIEVANT SAYS UCF MISUSED FUNDS

Former police chief says he was targeted

JESSICA SIMON

The former chief of UCF Police said that the university fired him from his post of 18 years after he raised questions about the way UCF spent state-building funds.

Richard Turkiewicz, now the director of public safety at the University of Oregon, filed a formal grievance with UCF after his contract wasn't renewed in November.

He alleges that UCF engaged in illegal use of funds during his post and that his contract wasn't renewed because he brought this information to light.

As of Monday, 25 of the allegations were found unsubstantiated by University of Oregon Audit and a grievance panel established by Dan Holsenbeck, vice president of University Relations, according to an e-mail from Amy Weeder, an executive director of UCF's University Audit.

Turkiewicz has scheduled a hearing to appeal those findings for Oct. 26. The investigation was launched based on a grievance package filed by Turkiewicz last year.

"For two years prior, I was asking questions and saying 'this isn't right,'" Turkiewicz said.

In the grievance package, Turkiewicz alleged violations of state rules on the part of UCF officials, including misappropriated giving funds, purposeful ignorance of traffic violations and state tax dollars inappropriately spent.

Subsequent to receiving notification of non-renewal of his job as police chief on Nov. 28, Turkiewicz decided to come forward with his information on the alleged violations against his superior and other UCF officials.

He requested an investigation by University Audit and a grievance panel.

"For two years, I was asking questions and saying 'this isn't right,'" Turkiewicz said.

"I have filed a formal grievance with the university and appealed that decision," he said.

Wideouts Javid James and Rocky Ross look to fill new roles

CARL WILKINS

Wideouts Javid James and Rocky Ross are looking to fill new roles in the backfield.

"The Wideouts have been a big part of our offense for the past three years," said head coach George O'Leary.

"Javid has been a consistent performer, and Rocky has shown great potential," he said.

This year, they will be expected to lead the offense and help the team achieve its goals.

"We're excited to see what they can do," O'Leary said.

ASSEMBLY OF PRIDE
Group holds event to show cultural strength
In the packed Cape Florida Ballroom of the Student Union, students hurried to catch up with friends and grab a seat to see Def Poetry Jam's Steve Bia or one of several other performances that filled the room with music, dance and an encompassing Asian-American voice.

This event had been in the works since March and was put on by the: editors of a minority group-organized campus that is trying to make its voice heard.

The Asian Pacific American Coalition, better known as APAC, aimed to prepare the assembly that it is a forum to be reckoned with at UCF.

The student organization, standing for leadership, community empowerment and unity held one of its biggest events of the year for the third year in a row.

So many people attended the assembly that some UCF students and student supporters from different universities, including Midwestern University of Florida, San Jose State University and University of North Florida had to stand in the back.

"It's definitely overwhelming," said Mia Tian Kim, co-chair of APAC. "We definitely have more support in the Florida community.

The event was held to welcome freshmen to campus and to spread awareness of the Asian-American culture at UCF.

Brian Hoggard, president of the UCF Student Government Association, addressed the audience.

"I am so excited about this event," Hoggard said. "We're going to have a lot of fun, I just want to see everyone." He added that he is excited about all the events planned.

Jia, whose spoken-word poems have appeared on television, on CNN and in books, addressed some of his cultural concerns throughout his portion of the assembly.

"You may only want to give us Asian-American month, but if you open your eyes, you'll see it every day of the year," Jia said. "We contribute so much to society, but society only wants to talk about parts of us.

When Jia first came on stage, he began to walk out to the chart-topping song of the same name by DJ Kaskade, setting the atmosphere for the beginning of his routine.

"How can you get a 15-year-old man to walk out?" Jia asked the audience. After requesting how the song and then walking for it to play due to ascetic technical difficulties, he said, "I can't feel it in my bones; I can't feel it in my culture.

Jia then showed the audience what he was presenting with a piece about different Asian nationalities engulfed in several aspects of life. He presented the piece as a way to share his strong opinions about the state of Asian-Americans today.

"We don't have to give them the power of their stereotypes," he said.

"That is the perception of someone else.

After sharing his feelings on cultural awareness, he paused. "I'm too young to write a book, but I'm too young to treat the Asian-American month, but if you open your eyes, you'll see it every day of the year," Jia said. "We contribute so much to society, but society only wants to talk about parts of us.

Hygiene campaign uses humor.

The Florida Department of Health's campaign has a 5th tune. Web site, influenza (the flu), the risk, "sneezes, the infectious particles and pneumonia are some ever, and you contact them, eyes or nose, and you may contract the common cold, strep throat, intestinal disorders.

"If someone coughs or sneezes, the infectious particles land on the table, or the chair, or the doorknob or whatever, and you contact them, and then you eat, or rub your eyes or nose, and you may contract the flu," Deichen said. "We see that pattern all the time."

"We want to get someone with a sense of humor," Deichen said. "Someone who's not going to get sick."

If UCF's 5th Guy Campaign goes well, it could be replicated elsewhere, Deichen said. "They [the Florida Department of Health] really like the idea that we're doing this," Deichen said.

UCF is the first university to model a campaign after one by the Florida Department of Health.

"We are extremely excited about UCF's implementation of our 5th Guy Campaign," said Kevin Cane, press secretary for the Florida Department of Health, in an e-mail interview. "This is an innovative campaign, so it's no surprise that UCF, a university known for both academic excellence and athletics, is the first university to embrace the campaign," Deichen said. Iraqi prime minister fires back at senators

QASIM ABDUL-ZAHRA
Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Iraq's beleaguered prime minister on Sunday lashed out at U.S. lawmakers who have called for his ouster, saying Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton and Carl Levin need to "come to their senses.

Nouri al-Maliki, who is fighting to hold his government together after a series of strategic setbacks, had earlier accused American officials of playing a "negative" role in the political and security battles in Iraq. A member of his government was killed, and he was frustrated that al-Maliki, who is a Sunni Arab, was named as the new prime minister.

"They are American officials who consider Iraq as if it were one of their villages, as I may call Hillary Clinton and Carl Levin. They should come to their senses," al-Maliki said at a news conference.

Al-Maliki launched the verbal counteroffensive in the final days before the American commander in Iraq Gen. David Petraeus, and U.S. Ambassador to Baghdad Ryan Crocker are due in Washington to report to Congress in Iraq since the introduction of 30,000 more American troops.

The Shiite prime minister, a former leader of the radical Mahdi Army militia that fought U.S. forces, said a negative report by Petraeus would not cause him to change course, although he added that if the booklet, "The Battle for Baghdad," now going to press would be "supportive of American strategy," it would not displease the politicians who are "maligning" it.

Al-Maliki appeared stung by the recent series of critical reports about how his government, including one from the Senateuddy Bush, who said he was frustrated that al-Maliki and Clinton had made progress on political benchmarks "in a very predictable way" and that, if the U.S. military had said that the movement had been "highly likely," it would have been "disingenuous." The report states that the Clinton and Clinton have called al-Maliki's government "disastrous." Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said that if al-Maliki's government fails to "come to grips with the situation" or to "improve the situation," the Shiites will be "disappointed" and "will question the legitimacy of the government and will demand its ouster.""I think we have a right to be critical of a government that is not doing what a great many people who worked hard in this country, our own people, make difficult and sacrifices for the safety and security of the Iraqi people," said al-Maliki. "I think the criticism is fair.

McConnell and Reid spoke on Fox News Sunday. Last week Sen. John Wemns, D-Vt., said the United States should order a token withdrawal of forces by Christmas. The Christmas chairmen of the Armed Services Committee said such a move would show the administration was serious about pursuing progress or retreat among the country's religious, ethnic and ethnic groups.

Washington and Baghdad were invited to Iraq together earlier this month as part of the multitude of congressional delegations who are visiting the country before the expected second debate on Capitol Hill about U.S. troop levels and plans for a withdrawal. Separately, a Kurdish security official said a Kurdish helicopter gunship attacked two Kurdish police posts on Sunday, killing four policemen and wounding eight. The U.S. military said it was investigating the report.

Jabbar Tawer, spokesman for the Kurdish Peshmerga militia, said two police vehicles were destroyed in the airstrike on the northeast of Baghdad and he believed the attack was a mistaken strike.

"We demand American troops not to do any operation for the U.S. airstrike, against the operation, the Kurdish Interior Minister said in a statement. "The U.S. forces should take care to understand what troops are deployed in the border areas." Al-Maliki said some U.S. military, police and Red Cross missions were due in Washington to report to the administration about the situation in Iraq. The U.S. military said it was investigating the report.

UIUC KNIGHTS OFFENSE

KNIGHTS GO ON THE OFFENSIVE

Bright House Networks Stadium: it seems to be the top topic regarding UCF sports in and around Central Florida. It was one of the first questions head football coach George O'Leary was asked at both the Conference USA and UCF media days. Newspapers from Daytona Beach to Miami wrote articles about the stadium this summer. It's even displayed on the cover of the football media guide.

But with all this coverage on the football stadium, there is some breaking news: a football team will actually be playing in it. Since that fact seems to have been over by some here, here is a preview of the Knights' offense this season.

WHOM TO WATCH

5 JEREMY HALE

Profile: Hale performed his senior year at Milton High School. The football team under the leadership of head coach Tim Jones is in search of new talent in the class of 2018. Hale had an impressive junior season that included 27 tackles, four sacks, and two forced fumbles. His performance earned him a scholarship offer from the Knights to play two years before transferring to the University of Central Florida.

JOEY THOMAS

Position: DT, 6'4" 310 lbs., from Carrollton, Ga.

Profile: Thomas is a transfer from Georgia State University. He played three seasons for the Panthers, recording 55 tackles and 11.5 tackles for loss during his time there. Thomas is expected to contribute immediately as a redshirt sophomore for the Knights in the 2018 season.

KAILEY BROWN

Position: WR, 5'10" 180 lbs., from Winter Garden, Fla.

Profile: Brown is a true freshman from Winter Garden High School. She was a three-sport athlete in high school, playing softball, volleyball, and basketball. Brown received a scholarship offer from the Knights to play four years of football starting in 2018.

UCF's PROJECTED OFFENSIVE LINEUP

As the Knights prepare for their Sept. 1 game against Florida Tech, here’s a look at the projected starting lineup for the offense.

Smith, Israel to lead UCF

When now 1am and I know what I've got to do to be successful, I welcome all the pressure."

O'Leary said that he wants to keep competition open at the quarterback position because he thinks that's the only way they play better.

Sophomore Marquel Neman is listed as the Knights' No. 3 quarterback to start the season, but he has never played a down in his collegiate career. Sophomore junior college transfer Michael Greco will be Neuman's main competition for the backup job.

Junior running back Kevin Smith is the key in the offense and everybody knows it. His 1,232 career rushing yards are the most by a UCF running back entering his junior season. After a fantastic 2005 season in which he ran for 1,279 yards as a true freshman, Smith's sophomore season was a bit of a disappointment.

He missed the final two games of the season with a shoulder injury and was suspended for another game for conduct detrimental to the team.

O'Leary said that Smith has matured in the offseason and Smith said that he is healthy and more than ready to get back on the field.

"I'm back, 100 percent," said Smith during U-USA Media Day. "I missed spring (practice), so I got a chance to watch from the sidelines and now, it's time for me to go back out there, put on the pads and get back with my team, where I belong."

Smith had just 23 receptions last year, but with the Knights in need of more offensive production, O'Leary is trying to get Smith more involved in the passing game and into some open spaces where he can use his size and speed and ability to create big plays.

"I think it's a challenge," Smith said about being the clear focus of the defense. "I'm a physical guy, I'm a pressure bursters player. It's a challenge for me, baby, and I'm ready to step up to the plate."

Senior Peters and Phillips Smith split carries when Kevin was unable to play last season. Peters has run out of eligibility and that leaves Phillips, a sophomore, as the team's top option as a second running back.

He ran 19 times for 181 yards last year and carried the ball in only three games in which he was the starting tailback. Peters is not the power back that Peters Smith was, but he is very quick.

If the Knights do need a dose of power in the backfield, they could turn to redshirt freshman Shane Smith. He is listed atop the depth chart at fullback, and he can definitely take as well as deliver a few shots to defend his with his 6-foot-5, 235-pound frame.

Wide receivers and tight ends:

For the first time in three years, UCF will start a season with a true go-to receiver. That role was handled by Brandon Marshall in 2005 and then Mike Willer in 2006, but both of those players are playing in the NFL. The top candidates to be the team's No. 1 receiver are junior Decker Ross and senior Jared James.

Ross was second among UCF receivers in catches and yards. He has the most experience of any of the team's receivers with 35 career catches, but Ross' style isn't about speed at the skill position. He is apt to be the team's slot receiver and running the short routes over the middle of the field.

When no one seemed to step up and complement Walker as the Knights' No. 2 wide receiver early last season, James got a chance to show his skills in the fourth game of the year and he produced first-rate stats. He caught seven passes for 70 yards and touchdowns against Southern Miss in his first career start.

He finished third on the team in yards and catches.

The likes of Brandon and Mike Willer are going to be defended by some of the best in the world. That's the way we play UCF history," James said. "However, I'm glad I can make their mark.

"I plan to be the best that Jared can be, and that's it. Those guys were great, but we plan to be Jared."

Junior Willie Thornton provides big-play potential, as all four of his career touchdown receptions, three of which came last season, have been from at least 20 yards out.

The focus of the Knights' passing game will be the skill position.

They seemed to have a good one this season with the signing of receiver Chad Alexander. Senior Kamar Allen and A.J. Gayton, two of last year's top receivers.

Alexander was a standout sprinter in the 200-meter dash and the 4×400-meter relay on the Lake Wales High School track team. Allen was named the first best prospect in the state of Florida by the Orlando Sentinel, and Gayton was ranked as the 16th-best wide receiver prospect in the nation by Scout.com.

The tight end position will be one of the most interesting for the Knights last year. Three tight ends combined for 16 catches. The top returning tight end is sophomore Corey Rabanal, who caught 12 passes for 149 yards. Senior Mike Merritt is currently hurt and senior Paul Job is transferring this season.

Brueggemeyer shines in debut

Friday's two matches.

"Petrasic is a stud," head coach Meg Colado said. "She is the best defender I think that I have ever coached. She is just so athletic, reads incredibly well and is just so competitive."

The Knights went on to win that game 25-20, while Petrasic's performance helped the team lose the next three matches, making it 16-16 midway through the season, which dated back to last season opening day of the tournament.

The Knights fell to Fordham in the first match of the day, snapping a 19-match losing streak for UCF, who captured the tournament title after going 3-1 on their home floor, had their way with the Knights, sweeping them 30-26, 30-23 and 30-24 in the first match of their season.

"She is just so athletic, reads incredibly well and is just so competitive."

Petrasic wasn't the only Knight to put up big numbers Saturday. Stephanie Serna posted 21 kills in the final match and totaled 41 for the tournament, earning herself All-Tournament team recognition.

"When (Sierra) is on, it is really tough to defend her," Colado said. "She has got such a quick arm. She is such a dynamic player, and she is an emotional player. She is an emotional player."

In the first match of the day, the Knights didn't fare well, losing to East Tennessee State in four games (30-23, 28-30, 30-26, 30-20), despite Schumel Niedermeyer earning her first of two doubles-doubles with 10 kills and 11 digs.

"There is progression in these losses, and I know the scores are not indicative of this progression," Colado said. "However, from our perspective, we sometimes have four and five freshmen on the floor at one time."

Freshman Whitney Turnbull and Petrasic provided a spark in the backcourt with a combined 25 kills, while Brueggemeyer registered 41 assists, but that wasn't enough against a Buccaneer defense that had Katherine Mortensen and Kenna Aggen account for 21 digs each.

On Friday, the Knights dropped two matches to Fordham and host Georgia State, 3-1 and 3-0, respectively, on the opening day of the tournament.

The Knights fell in the first three sets (30-26, 27-30, 29-30) in the first match of their season, despite 20 assists, 13 digs and four service aces from Brueggemeyer in her debut.

It didn't get any easier for the Knights against former Atlantic Sun foe Georgia State in the nightcap. The Panthers, who won the tournament title after going 3-1 on their home floor, had their way with the Knights, sweeping them 30-26, 30-23 and 30-24.

Despite winning only one match in the tournament, pressure from players like Brueggemeyer and Petrasic helped that win shine through the other three matches.

"We kept coming back out and playing a little bit better and a little bit better and we finally pulled it out in the end," Niedermeyer said. "It's so reassuring and it's so exciting to see us win and it just shows how our season is going to be."
Rosen's petition hurts Orlando

Liberty and justice for all

Celebrity justice seems like an anachronism. The past summer has been filled with celebrity seminars on how to handle legal trouble. Nicole Richie and Lindsay Lohan are just two examples of the high-profile victims, and, as a result, gotten loads of attention.

Celebrities are not the only ones who have gotten attention for crimes; some average citizens who occupy the felony news seem to get the same kind of fame for the crimes they have committed.

These were average citizens who were on the wrong side of the law, theuled above them. Some people temporarily feel that fame is the flapping hooves of the law within their minds. It’s unfounded.

If fame and money is so important to the victim, why not hire a lawyer? It is because the average man and woman in the street are not afforded the same legal system that celebrities are.

Nicole Richie bydore herself under the influence of drugs and alcohol and was sentenced to 42 days in jail. When she went to see her parents, she was only present at the jail for 62 minutes and was let go without serving her time.

Then there’s the complete case of Lewis Lash, who was arrested twice for DWI this past year.

First, she craved into a curb and hit the rear of her vehicle, which was packed with 146,972 grams of cocaine and methamphetamine. Then she was caught speeding on 95 after she had 0.62 grams of cocaine in her system. She got a sport utility vehicle and followed her husband and daughter after her latest arrest.

Lash got off with one day in jail, 36 months of probation, and 100 hours of community service. She must also complete an inpatient alcohol education program and three days of a community service program involving a mongol to talk to victims of the disability. Lash was not in prison for 30 days but for her behavior.

Both these women committed crimes because of alcohol and drugs, but because of the amount of money they had, their punishments seem too soft.

Actually, according to a U.S. Department of Justice report, 657,092 adults in 1997 went on driving while under the influence. So their sentences don’t reflect the consensus.

A more serious case with real punishment is that of Mary Winke. Winke admitted to her police prosecutor by shooting him in the back while he slept. She claimed she snapped after years of physical, verbal, and sexual abuse, but had no motive.

Winke was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter. Her three-year sentence was reduced to 210 days with 143 days of credits for time spent in prison. That left 66 days of credits were spent in a mental health hospital.

Winke was released last week and is now a free woman. In a report by the U.S. Sentencing Commission, in 1997, there were 84,500 murderer and four of those cases resulted in prosecution, similar to the facts in this case.

How about Debra LaFlaive who admitted to having sex with her 14-year-old student and then became pregnant? She blamed bipolar disorder.

LaFlaive isn’t known for her charitable side as well. He has the Harry and Jeanette Weinberg Foundation, which helped raise money for New York City’s Jewish Community Center. It is also the foundation that built the Jewish Community Pon Program.

This program provides free daycare, child care, and meals for children in the Tangier-Park community near the City.

"Do something for this community," Rosen told Debra LaFlaive, the owner of the Orlando Magic. "We have no supporting a very sorry fund too much money. It’s time for you to put it up or else.

To remind you, the Magic was "very unfortunate" he wanted to say.

Debra, despite what Rosen says has made demand to the community.

Recently, more than $22 million in scholarships, charities, and underprivileged youth. Of the $22 million, $6.5 million was donated to UCF for its DeVos Sports Business Management funds.

Even if he Debra does put all human beings to so had enemies behind bars, because they have done seriously well in those cases.

We should be able to use the justice system and its culture.

So the question presented with this petition, don’t sign it because it’s not the law to help the Orlando and essentially good for the rest.

The other day, I sat down at the computer to quickly check my Facebook account. A bullhorn later I was doing looking through photos albums and post comments on the walls of someone I said daily.

It seems that I can’t do anything quickly on the Internet these days. I find myself spending hours doing practically nothing, but at the same time, I realize that I am doing something really important, it’s like something from "The Dharma Zone.

It wasn’t until I was eating the other day that the amount of time I spent online fully registered.

I heard on the radio that an Israeli psychiatrist is putting for Internet Addiction Disorder (IAD) to put into the American Psychiatric Association’s Fifth edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). It would be alongside gambling disorder and sexual addiction.

In his name, Dr. Phule Duran, is licent­uated at New York University, University of Pennsylvania, especially geriatric.

Spend a little more time away from the computer. It’ll make you feel better, I promise.

The Internet allows us to be connected to the world in ways unimaginable 10 years ago, but it also motivates us to be disconnected.

Spend a little more time away from the Internet. This can be all that it’s worth to see what you’re missing.

We should be able to use the Internet as a tool to enhance our lives, and not as a tool to harm our lives.

The Internet is paying to be addicted to the Internet, the fact that there is such a concept is something that is very important. It is for us.

As a school bag, I’m going to try to break away from any kind of Internet addiction. I use it for just about everything when it comes to school and writing these columns. When I think about it, I think that I should do more research on the Internet and write掩盖s. Internet searches, a large part of my time disappearance, never to be able to do something better.

Although most of us are far from being addicted to the Internet, the fact is that there is a such a concept should be on everyone’s back. It is for us.

Newspaper classifieds can be a great source of information for finding apartments, rooms for rent, and other housing options. When reading through these ads, it's important to be aware of common scams and to take necessary precautions to ensure your safety and security. Always verify the authenticity of the property and the landlord, and never send money or provide personal information until you have seen the property in person and have established trust with the landlord.

- Contact Information: Always provide your contact information and be clear about the terms of the rent or lease agreement.
- Meeting Location: When meeting with potential landlords, choose a public location and bring a friend. Avoid meeting in secluded areas.
- References: Ask for and verify the landlord's references before signing any lease agreements.
- Security Deposit: Be wary of landlords who ask for an upfront payment before seeing the property or without providing a lease agreement.
