Faculty asked to raise the bar

Board argues for higher standards

LAUREN PAULUSKAS

UCF faculty gained new ground in contract negotiations, which may allow them to demand raises. The BOG argued to raise the "acceptable level" for employees from 1.2 to 1.5. An evaluation of an "satisfactory" and any time an employee's evaluation falls below a 2.0, he or she will have to meet specific benchmarks within a period of three years or the employee can be dismissed.

Sherly Andrews, associate general counsel for the BOG, said "UCF will raise the bar against the employing employees. Faculty are evaluated on three levels: teaching, research and service. These are weighted differently depending on the employee and the focus of his or her work.

UCF volunteers clean up Econ River

AMANDA MOORE

Twenty-one students eager to make a difference get a chance on Sunday. Along with a local organization, Volunteer UCF held its first environmental cleanup of the semester at Snow Hill near the Little Big Econ State Forest. Biology sophomore Linda Hasluch carries a hard-core environmentalist, and "she proved it. Not only was she the first to arrive for the VOCs, she also helped saving the afternoon host and walked miles from her Blomstedt apartment to volunteer. The UCF Visual Arts Building to catch a ride. At least five LEAP scholars attended in order to meet volunteer requirements set by their program.

Seven pairs of Nikon, five pairs of Kodaks, and two matching jackets of Coca-Cola arrived and the volunteers wearing them were ready to go working.

"I would be sitting at home right now, you know? I'd like to make, even if just a little one, a difference."

UCF officials ready for tropical weather

ROBYN SIEGSKY Staff writer

With the passing of the two-year anniversary of Hurricane Katrina and the arrival of the notoriously storm-riddled month of September, UCF officials must prepare for the worst.

Statistics and Actuarial Science professor Mark Johnson and his colleagues, Georgia researches Charles Watson, shared their predictions for the 2007 hurricane season with the Central Florida community in a press conference at UCF.

Johnson and Waton predicted that there will be higher activity along the U.S. coasts.

Teacher's arrest freezes 2 classes

JEFFREY KLEY Staff writer

The July arrest of UCF professor Michael Shawn Reichert left the political science department with gaps in its junior class schedule. Reichert was arrested July 11 after a university technician found child pornography on his work laptop. He was released from jail on July 11.

As a professor, Reichert taught five classes annually at UCF. Three of his classes were stand for all of 2007, and two were set for spring of 2008.

One of the classes Reichert was scheduled to teach was "Sociology and Methods," a statistics course for political science students. It was one of the required classes in the political science program, other than American government. This makes it a priority class for many students.

The political science department worked quickly to resolve the situation. Reichert

Pres. candidate holds fundraiser

JEFFREY KILEY/STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

The event was part of a series of small-scale fund-raisers known "Small Change for Big Change." It was held at the Friday's Front Bar, Sports Grill on International Drive.

Edwards stood on a stage at the edge of the packed restaurant and immediately commenced on the compact crowd.

"I don't think we could get any more people in here if we had to," he said.

An official head count was not taken, but Edwards Bailey, founder and president of Orlando One Camps - the activist organization affiliated with Edwards' campaign - estimated an attendance of about 400.

Edwards said he believes the nominal $15 ticket price, along with the promotional emphasis put on what made the event appealing to the average citizen.

"This is a John Edwards to have it at a regular place with regular food and regular people," Bailey said. "Somebody can come here to watch the game, sit and be a viewer or a skater."

Edwards launched his speech with topics ranging from global warming to local law enforcement.

One of his key points was sending increased support for the rebuilding of the Gulf Coast states still suffering from the effects of Hurricane Katrina, which struck in 2005.

"There is something inherently wrong about making a profit off of something that everyone needs," Viner said. "It would be like selling air, you just cannot do that."

Another idea that Edwards introduced was a government-funded tuition system for colleges in America.

"We need a surge in New Energy," Edwards said. "We need to take in new Energy."

Edwards also spoke about a law he introduced in Washington that would mandate officials be qualified for the positions they hold. "We have a job for them, what else do we have? Law after Michael Brown, the embattled founder and president of the Federal Emergency Management Agency who folded a public utility for the Katrina rezone."

"We are putting the most we have in a universal healthcare coverage system," Edwards said.

Edwards talked about everything from global warming to foreign policy importance, but the focus being more support in the Gulf Coast states still suffering from the effects of Hurricane Katrina in 2005 and still suffer from the effect.

UCF Alliance to enact energy-saving projects

TABA YOUNG

UCF aims to be greener with the formation of a new Sustainability Alliance.

Five key campus departments that focus on environmental sustainability are joining together this fall to replace the previous Environmental Management System and create an encompassing alliance.

"The purpose of this alliance is to create a forum allowing different groups to come together and discuss some of their key issues," said Lee Kernek, associate vice president of Administration and Finance. "What this group cares about because of that common interest is for a sustainable campus.,"

Five departments included in the new alliance are the Physical Plant, the Center for Energy and Sustainability, Campus Planning and Natural Resources, the UCF Arboretum, and the UCF Department of Environmental Health and Safety.

The alliance, still in the beginning phases of creation, is working on drafting a mission statement and a set of objectives that will encompass an environmental policy focused on teaching, research, and service.

"We're focusing on operations first because it's a good way to have a facility department within UCF," said John Bernard, assistant director and environmental steward for the UCF Arboretum. "We're going to include research and teaching eventually but right now, we're focusing on facilities since it is priority.

The alliance was also created in the wake of UCF's budget cuts, which mandated some of the group's projects in the coming years.

"I think there is a possible financial benefit in having a sustainable environmental strategy," Kernek said. "For example, right now we're looking at ways we can conserve energy and reduce costs at the table as part of this group.

A goal of the alliance is to provide members with opportunities to come together and discuss some key issues, keeping one another informed on current and upcoming projects as well as bringing new concepts to the table.

"What we haven't seen in the past is the cross communication and single voice, and that's really what we're looking for with this," Kernek said. "All of these organizations are now communicating about what they have going on, and they're working together on the plans and permits and that kind of stuff.

The alliance is also planning on working with businesses and organizations outside of the campus.

"We also have a very good network of people who will be working on the inside of the campus," Kernek said. "And then these individuals are working on the outside of the campus.

Some of the outside groups the alliance has already been in touch with are Progress Energy, the St. Johns River Water Management District and the Florida Department of Environmental Protection.

"We met with Progress Energy to talk about forming a partnership with them to work on energy savings for the campus," Kernek said.

The alliance also intends to eventually reach out to the student body.

"Once the group is really functioning and they're out there and they've set their course, then we can plan on doing actual outreach — going to student groups and actually going out and talking about why they can get involved and what the group is doing and how we can have more sustainable environment on this campus," Kernek said.

Marty Dunn, a freshman English major at UCF, said that on-campus residents can start making the campus a more sustainable place right away.

"For kids that live on campus, if they just turn up the thermostat a couple of degrees, that would save a ton of money," she said. "We could also use more recycle bins, especially with all the water and soda that is used. I only see two on campus.

To help in their goal to involve students, the alliance will be creating a sub-committee to work specifically on student-environmental group EarthFest. The Green Fee is a student fee intended to generate money that will be spent on efforts to increase sustainability throughout UCF.

"The plethora of environmental problems facing UCF are all rooted in a lack of planning and forward thinking on behalf of the Master Plan Committee," said Alan Bekoff, environment and sustainability coordinator for the Student Government Association at UCF. "The Green Fee has the potential to solve all of these problems caused by the lack of foresight by the administration, by providing funds for sustainable practices on campus."

"The committee will be composed of students and staff, that way the students' issues will be heard but also be compounded by what the staff can achieve," Bernard said.

In addition to education and outreach, the alliance and each of the departments within it have a vast amount of current and prospective projects in the works including long-term and short-term projects for which they hope to see carried out under the alliance.

"We have projects that we see as a good priority, where you can see the results now and get a payback within the year and those are really positive kinds of programs for us," Kernek said. "There are some bigger projects — long-term projects that will help us is a multitude of one-year projects."

One of the short-term, good payback projects include the Center for Energy and Sustainability building commissioning project.

"The results of that project are an $80,000 savings in a 12-month period," said Tracy Radke, marketing specialist at the Center for Energy and Sustainability.

With UCF being located in an urban environment, one of the main long-term concerns of the Alliance is temperature increase from impractical methods.

"One of the more long-term projects that will help reduce the environmental footprint on campus is the planting of pine trees around campus to increase the canopy, which will help decrease the campus temperatures," Bernard said.

"The idea is to increase your canopy which will reduce your temperatures, thus saving energy costs," she said.

As Khan, a graduate student studying media at UCF, said, he thinks UCF was doing well environmentally, even before all of the new projects to improve the campus environment.

"My top environmental concerns are global warming and land development issues," Khan said. "UCF does land development but it's more commercial land and they use venues, for example, rain forest land. There is nothing being built here that's not useful to the community because it's a learning center and we need the facilities.

Martin Quijale, the director of Landscape and Natural Resources and the Arboretum, reiterated the importance of environmental sustainability and the Alliance's goal to act in accordance with the true definition of that word.

"We can't pollute the air and water, use up non-renewable resources or take profits on short-time benefits for the good of future generations," Quijale said.

BRINGING UCF TO YOU
Department tries to fill classes while Reichert's case is tried

An arrest made last night by UCF PD was possible thanks to a new system called Be On the Lookout, according to Chris Joseph, crime analyst for the UCF PD.

Shemedia Howell was arrested after a Physical Plant enforcer recognized her from a list of suspects on a BOLO notice.

Howell, who had a previous trespass warrant against her and had signed a contract stating that she understood the terms that she was allowed on UCF property, was seen walking around the Library when the Physical Plant employee called the UCF PD, according to Joseph.

BOLO is a result of a request by Aimee Alldahondo, an employee at the Library. The program started early in April and has had two successful arrests so far.

"Alldahondo asked if there was a way to get a list of suspects from the archives, scanned is the official transcripts from the beginning of the semester."

The department found its replacement in Joyce Marguerite, a retired professor from the University of Akron.

"That might seem easy to you," Marguerite said. "But it is harder than it sounds."

The paper transcripts from the 1970s had to be located from the archives and sent to UCF.

Marguerite said that he has enjoyed his time spent at UCF so far.

"I like the kids, the class is fun and the people at the political science department have been great," Marguerite said.

Andrew Hudson, a 22-year-old political science major, was one of the students who was in the dark about who was going to teach the course and methods class.

"I didn't know who was going to be my teacher until I showed up for class that day," Hudson said.

Hudson specifically chose that section of courses and methods because Reichert was teaching it. He said he was looking forward to taking the class, but after hearing of the arrest, knew his plans would have to change.

"I took a good place that he wouldn't be teaching it anymore," Hudson said.

The other two classes Reichert was assigned to teach during the fall were canceled. They were canceled prior to the semester's start.

Upon hearing about the upcoming complications with Reichert, Handberg effectively froze the two spring classes Reichert was meant to teach. This means that the classes can be dropped by students from their schedules but cannot be added until Reichert's teaching situation is determined.

The outcome of Reichert's proceedings will determine the fate of those two classes. If he is cleared and able to come back and teach, the classes will be resumed.

Handberg said that he is confident this won't cause too much of a problem for students in the political science program, as the two classes were elective courses.

"The classes were not ones that were required," Handberg said. "There are places for the students to go."

The political science department has not yet set a definitive date to inform students whether the classes will be offered as scheduled or canceled.

Senior quarterback Kyle Brunett completed 65 percent of his passes last year, third-highest mark in UCF history.

UCF returns 17 starters from its 4-8 team of 2006. The Knights hope that more experience equals more wins.

The Knights have lost all 7 of their games played against teams from BCS conferences during the O'Leary era.

Forgetting the past

Knights' offense must be consistent

If there's one great thing about the upcoming 2007 UCF Football season, it's that it can't get any worse than last year. Sure, the Knights could go 0-12, get shutout by the eventual national champions and finish last in their division. But this season, no matter what, will be different. The Knights have a new stadium and a new look—literally.

Brunett puts special in UCF special teams

UCF's top punt returner is trying to bounce back from a sub-par season. The place kicker caused some heartburn for Knight fans last year, and his job situation is subject to change. But according to head coach George O'Leary, a simple rule change may have the biggest impact on the Knights' special teams in 2007.
That Wolfpack talent base consists of two of the top 10 receivers by the ACC seniors John David and Derrick Blackman. Together, the pair has more than 50 career receptions. And Blackman currently makes first in the N.C. State secondary in career kickoff return average (9.8) and second in ACC history.

But the Knights' main concern should be their opponent's run game. Tony Vaill and Andrew Brown are two of the ACC's best runners, each averaging more than 50 yards per game last season.

That could pose a threat to UCF's defense, which has struggled to wrap up opponents in past seasons. That is something we have to work on that we need to improve in order to stop the Wolfpack's run game.

And it's possible. The Knights bring back a very experienced defense with eight returning starters, including all four in the secondary.

"Coach (Jim) Pasange came in with a new attitude," senior defensive end Leger Douzable said about the in-season defensive line coach. "It's clear, we've been working on pass rushing, doing drills every day to get better. I think when we make everyone a little bit better.

On the other side of the ball, the quarterback spot should be an interesting matchup between the two teams.

N.C. State quarterback Daniel Jones will be taking control of the offense for a second straight year. Jones, who started the final 11 games of 2018 after the starting role was Marcus Spears moved to tight end and Jones is in the season. Jones played in all 12 games last season, and despite starting only nine of them, he threw for 1,497 yards—the fifth-best single-season passing total in school history.

The announcement of Jones as the starting quarterback came Monday morning that the Knights had little time to prepare for Brummitt's passing game. "He throws, but it's football, so you've got to be ready for the unexpected," Douzable said. "Douzable played pretty good last year, so I think we'll be ready for him."

For the Knights, Kyte Irwin will be returning the offense for the first time as the lone quarterback, besides sharing time in the spring season with the graduated Steven McPherson. Irwin finished with two strong performances against Conference USA rivals Tulane and UAB.

Irwin's freshman years were consistent that his leadership will be key to the team's success. "You see his leadership in his body language, you can see it in his throws and everything he does," Simon said. "That's his role. That's his duty. It's a year for him to be the senior leader quarterback, and he's step up. You can definitely see it.

However, Irwin will be lacking one of his main targets. The Knights lost a lot of talent in graduated wide receiver Maki McMillan, who led the team with 90 receptions, 1,459 yards, and 13 touchdowns in 2018.

"Two true freshmen," Kevin and Kyle, everything is on him. He is currently eighth in the nation with remaining

Just as last year, O'Leary said that O'Brien, a senior, is the team's best runner, each averaging more than 50 yards per game last season.

That leadership starts tomorrow. "These boys will be ready for the unexpected," O'Leary said. Now the Knights are the way they were last year."

"I think Kevin has got some things bigger," O'Leary said. "He is a very smart football player, and one thing that Keatel's been in that he knows not just his position, but he knows a lot of the positions.

Smith should have a lot of protection from his offensive line. The Knights return four starters to the offensive line from a year ago, and those four have combined to give up just 10 sacks. Among them are seniors Simon and Kyle Brantley.

And it's possible. The Knights bring back a very experienced defense with eight returning starters, including all four in the secondary.

"Coach (Jim) Pasange came in with a new attitude," senior defensive end Leger Douzable said about the in-season defensive line coach. "It's clear, we've been working on pass rushing, doing drills every day to get better. I think when we make everyone a little bit better.

UCF wideouts play big role

September 1

The Knights’ star opportunity to satisfy their hunger will come Saturday in Raleigh, N.C., against North Carolina State, which is making its own disappointing season, and which are the matchups to watch.

When Knights have ball
Running back Kevin Smith vs. defensive tackle DeShawn Pleasant. The Knights have a find any way to get the ball in hands to safety depth and he is fully recovered from the shoulder injury that forced him to miss two games last season. Smith has piled up 104 yards in nine games. The Dawg Wailer toward the coast, the biggest of all, isn’t his best running back has been working on his receiving skills since the offseason.

He only had 28 catches last year, but head coach George O’Leary has made it clear that Smith more involved in the passing game this year. These coaches Smith has the better off the Knight’s wide receivers. The Wolfpack has seen on their Defensive “Rm’ers” select in the past two NFL drafts.

With all these options, Pleasant is one of the few experienced players that the Wolfpack have on their defensive line. In previous year, pulling a surprising All-American Game Conference selection, has had 23 consecutive. He said how many who also can play receiver, but position he’s more accustomed to. He ended last season with 46 tackles, seven of which went for a loss.

Wide receivers Kumar Aikens and A.J. Guyton vs. secondary players. The most experienced holder Smith will have the task of slowing down the Wolfpack’s kicking game. The Knights need more of that kind of play from their players.

The Wolfpack’s kickers have been successful. Senior Curtis Howard has taken over the No. 3 punting prospect in the nation, with his speed and pressure, which could be the key.

Against the Wolfpack, the Knights need more than just a force-missable-piece-quarterback. They need to make more than just a mistake.

Running backs Toney Burney and Lawrence Brown vs. linebackers Chance Henley and Steven Brown. Brown and Baker form one of the best red tortoises in the nation. They were both recently named to the 2007 Davey O’Brien Award Watch List, Baker led the nation in rushing with 209 yards.

His standout game of last season came when he rushed for a career-high 244 yards against Clemson. Burney kicked off the season in rushing in seven games last season. He ended with 156 yards on 60 rushing yards. He is expected to face Florida State, against whom he ran for 135 yards.

Bucket and Brown are the young duo doing all the work. They both surprised when they weren’t so as they were sopho­more in previous season.

The Knights’ kickers have definitely had their troubles last season, especially in tackling, and pass coverage. Their top tackler, Randy Dentz, has graduated.

The group’s most talented player, Jordan Richards, is not the season with a shoulder injury. It should be interesting to see how Baker and Henderson fill the void.

The two have combined to take back four games at kicker in their careers. Henderson will start at middle linebacker while fellow will take over Richards’ old spot at weakside linebacker.

Final thoughts
This is O’Leary’s fourth year at UCF and he feels like the time to take this program to another level on the field has got to be now.

When I get here, said, “here’s what we need to turn the page and the school has done everything that we’ve ever asked.” He also said it during summer: “I think it’s time now that we need to start doing our job.”

The Knights have nothing to show for their games this year. They were 0-2 in 2007, they can’t control.

They have to face Wake Forest, South Carolina, Florida and South Florida twice, with an average of more than 20 points.

The Wolfpack are not as deep in kick returns as they were, but they still have a chance with a 78 percent success rate and a sense of discipline that that will help them. The Wolfpack are now 1-0 with well established coach Chuck Amato.

It’s not the team’s main priority, but it’s something that they are working on.

And with their experience on both sides, they do have a shot.

If you don’t want to be a victim of your own mistakes, how nice it would be to turn things around.

UCF’s wideouts will play a big role this season. He ended the year with 142 return yards and no touchdowns.

UCF’s starting quarterback Blake Cle­gan is shorted to be the Knights’ primary placekicker this season. Clegan, a two-year veteran at Coral Springs who graduated last year, is having 47 yards per punt in his first season, his 10 punt returns in the No. 7 punting prospect in the nation, according to KickScout.com.

Placements
Senior Michelle Torres missed three of his first four field goal attempts in 2006, which still won him the BCS game-week competition with his field goal with Wake Beach. But Torres finished last in the nation, converting just 19 of his final 20 attempts.

This year, he will be one of the top kickers in a UCF single season. Despite that success, O’Leary said that Torres is not a kick to be his starting kicker. “I will come off the field knowing that I succeed in kicking the No. 3 kicker,” O’Leary said.

Saturday’s Matchup

UCF (2-3) at NC State (4-2)

UCF wideouts play big role

Saturday in Raleigh, NC.

UCF’s three wideouts for 58 yards.

The Knights’ star opportunity to satisfy their hunger will come Saturday in Raleigh, N.C., against North Carolina State, which is making its own disappointing season, and which are the matchups to watch.

When Knights have ball
Running back Kevin Smith vs. defensive tackle DeShawn Pleasant. The Knights have a find any way to get the ball in hands to safety depth and he is fully recovered from the shoulder injury that forced him to miss two games last season. Smith has piled up 104 yards in nine games. The Dawg Wailer toward the coast, the biggest of all, isn’t his best running back has been working on his receiving skills since the offseason.

He only had 28 catches last year, but head coach George O’Leary has made it clear that Smith more involved in the passing game this year. These coaches Smith has the better off the Knight’s wide receivers. The Wolfpack has seen on their Defensive “Rm’ers” select in the past two NFL drafts.

With all these options, Pleasant is one of the few experienced players that the Wolfpack have on their defensive line. In previous year, pulling a surprising All-American Game Conference selection, has had 23 consecutive. He said how many who also can play receiver, but position he’s more accustomed to. He ended last season with 46 tackles, seven of which went for a loss.

Wide receivers Kumar Aikens and A.J. Guyton vs. secondary players. The most experienced holder Smith will have the task of slowing down the Wolfpack’s kicking game. The Knights need more of that kind of play from their players.

The Wolfpack’s kickers have been successful. Senior Curtis Howard has taken over the No. 3 punting prospect in the nation, with his speed and pressure, which could be the key.

Against the Wolfpack, the Knights need more than just a force-missable-piece-quarterback. They need to make more than just a mistake.

Running backs Toney Burney and Lawrence Brown vs. linebackers Chance Henley and Steven Brown. Brown and Baker form one of the best red tortoises in the nation. They were both recently named to the 2007 Davey O’Brien Award Watch List, Baker led the nation in rushing with 209 yards.

His standout game of last season came when he rushed for a career-high 244 yards against Clemson. Burney kicked off the season in rushing in seven games last season. He ended with 156 yards on 60 rushing yards. He is expected to face Florida State, against whom he ran for 135 yards.

Bucket and Brown are the young duo doing all the work. They both surprised when they weren’t so as they were sopho­more in previous season.

Simpsons, Stardust couldn't save the season from a different kind of can

WILLIAM GOSS

From Spider-Man to Spider-Pig, from McClane to McLovin, this summer's blockbusters pretty much blew before they blew us away.

Unnecessary three-quels abounded — a Shrek here, a Rush Hour there, all across one big Ocean — and even the anticipated trilogy cappers had an unfortunate tendency to disappoint (We're looking at you, Peter Parker), with Pirates even more of a chore than last summer's predecessor.

With battered expectations from the get-go, it was easier to swallow the less-lousy Fantastic Four, or the over-the-top antics of Bruce Willis battling baddies atop airplanes. Horror fans got their due with the surprisingly solid 28 Weeks Later and 1408, while the early Oscar contenders - A Mighty Heart's Angelina Jolie, Away From Her's Julie Christie, La Vie en Rose's Marion Cotillard and 10 Cloverfield Lane's Don Cheadle - made their dent and walked away with fingers crossed.

Jon Voight squandered any remaining crumbs of credibility with two toy-based projects (Bratz made Transformers look like Superbad) and a Mormon massacre movie, just for good measure.

Meanwhile, Jonah Hill rose above the detritus to steal the spotlight in Knocked Up and earn it in Superbad, with no small thanks going to current comic wunderkind Judd Apatow (writer-director of the former, producer of the latter).

Somewhere around the midpoint, redemption crested the horizon: a Knocked Up for every Delta Farce, a Simpsons Movie for every License To Wed, a Superbad for every Who's Your Caddy?, a Hot Rod for every I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry.

It took surprises big and small to salvage such a sizeable slump of a summer. And wouldn't you know it, the surprises did come. One of the lesser Harry Potter novels was magically transformed into one of the best film adaptations the franchise has seen to date. Those who actually saw the underperforming Sunshine or Stardust realized that there might be hope for sci-fi and fantasy after all.

Once, Ratatouille and Hairspray kept things admirably buoyant, while Matt Damon showed Bruce Willis (and Optimus Prime) a trick or two on how to make action exciting again with his spectacular The Bourne Ultimatum.

If one managed to catch You Kill Me or Rescue Dawn, there was entertainment to be had, and if one managed to avoid Daddy Day Camp, well, they just ought to count themselves lucky.

Yet again, another summer movie season ends with the close of August, although this year finds itself ending with Halloween and a ping-pong-playing Christopher Walken. Only in Hollywood.
More than a year has passed since Atreyu released A Death-Grip on Everything. On September 12, and their fans have been in need of a fix. The band’s army务必 to schedule a Tuesday to pick up Lead Sails Paper Anchor, an album that will do nothing but add fuel to the fire of passion and rage.

While Atreyu’s new content may be a step back to their hardcore roots, the material may also lend itself to wider appeal. Much of the criticism behind the band's new album is delivered by an apparent lack of growth. The band has not completely abandoned their dark edge, but there is no denying the addition of pop punk as an added twine.

“Atreyu out to do something more?” is the question this album poses. Atreyu has expanded their sound, ultimately driving some fans away with their softer sound. The song seems a bit more generic and a bit less bad, but that's what it is. The woods are intriguing: the solos are phenomenal, and the melodies will stick. The band’s fusion of screaming accompanied by useful vocals has put their album at the top of the heap and must have crossed for 2007.

Lead Sails Paper Anchor is kick-started by the dramatic percussion and guitar work on “Downstairs.” The track on the record, “Falling Down” sounds like a New Order - Gothic style made it on the album.

Oscar-hopeful films fill fall season

Selection of movies for the last 4 months of 2007 feature big-name directors, casts

ant

WILLIAM GOSS

A fall season brimming with Oscar offerings and miscellany is once more upon us, bringing with it new offerings from Woody Allen (Casanova's Dearest), Todd Haynes (Bob Dylan biopic I'm Not There), Paul Thomas Anderson (There Will Be Blood), and Paul WS. Anderson (sequel to Resident Evil and Alien vs. Predator). There will be film adaptations of both The Rite Revisited and Love in the Time of Cholera, since our faculty watches movies too.

Ridley Scott himself will reunite the stars of Kingdom and starring Naomi Watts. Eli Roth, take note(s). While we can't say much , this month's No Country for Old Men (Nov.) : The Coen brothers' latest, reportedly a no-holds-barred button-pushing extravaganza without having seen more than two minutes of it? Between this and Southland Tales (Nov.) : The Wachowskis' 在ga ; there's certainly something going on.

 Hector Garcia's film adaptations of both The Rite Revisited and Love in the Time of Cholera, since our faculty watches movies too.

In the meantime, this is what we're most keen on catching before 2007 is out:

• Virtuosity: They're Back! (Friday): What can we say about this bound-to-be-filler-ridiculous, do-good-reel-cliffs-action extravagana without having seen more than two minutes of it? Between this and Children of Men, Clive Owen seems to be establishing himself as the opposite of abortion.

• The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford (Sept.) and Gone Baby Gone (Oct.): Word on the street is, Owens' Thirteen scene-stealer Casey Affleck is about to break out with this Brad Pitt Western and brother Ben's directorial debut.

• Postal (Oct.): Doubleful that it'll open here, we still hold out, er, "hope" that Uwe Boll's latest, reportedly a no-holds-barred button-pushing comedy, makes its way to our local screens, if only so we can see for ourselves what the man has cooked up this time.

• Funny Games (Oct.): Michael Haneke's (Cache) remake of his own provocative 1997 thriller, this time in English and starring Naomi Watts. EL Roth, take notes!

• No Country for Old Men (Nov.): The Coen brothers adapt Cormac McCarthy's powerful novel of crime and punishment in the American West, circa 1980. You had us at "Coen brothers" but early reviews and a sure-fire trailer certainly don't hurt matters.

• Southland Tales (Nov.): Just how much of a mess is writer-director Richard Kelly's ambitious follow-up to Donnie Darko? We'll soon see.

• June (Dec.): From the writer-director of Thank You For Smoking, and starring Hard Candy's Ellen Page, The Office's Rainn Wilson, and Argoed Development's Michael Cera and Joey Bate-man. Even if they are actually reading phone books, count us in.

• Aliens vs. Predator: Requiem (Dec. 27): What? Don't give that look. After that red-band trailer showed up last week, we're back for more.

• The Sandmen and The Orphans (Dec.): Earning raves from Sundance and Cannes, respectively, this sibling screenplay and this Spanish ghost story, produced by Guillermo del Toro (Pan's Labyrinth, Hellboy), are both stuck firmly on our radar.

Reality shows making tatts mainstream

JAMIE SALLAMAN

The Learning Channel's popular Miami Ink franchise has brought tattooing into the mainstream of pop culture, and as a result, UCF's inked artist community is bringing more tattoos and tattoo artists to the mainstream.

Tattoos have gone from being for bikers and punk rockers only, to being a more acceptable form of expression for everyone, no matter how hardcore or mildmannered you may be.

According to the American Academy of Dermatology, 24 percent of Americans 18 to 29 years old have at least one tattoo.

And that percentage rises to 40 percent among people 18 to 29 years old.

Not everyone looks like Kat Von D. LA Ink's tattoo-covered leading lady, but they may be getting there.

Kerin A. Schusterman, senior interdisciplinary studies major, says tattoos are personal and now socially acceptable forms of expression.

"I personally believe red roses signify beauty, and I wanted a piece in place that wouldn't be shown all the time," Waldon said.

Waldon said she feels tattoos can turn into an addiction.

"I really want another, but I don't like the pain," Waldon said.

"I'm going to get another one soon, though, with my mom's name," Waldon said.

Waldon also said she watches LA Ink.

"Those people are awesome," she said. "If I had the money, I would definitely get more done there."

Steven Travis, a 19-year-old sociable business major, said he designed his own tattoo.

"He got his skull in a sun tattoo in Denmark when he was 18," Travis said.

"It's a very personal family thing that's kind of negative," Travis said. "He also said he might want to get another tattoo in the future." Travis explained that the tattoo on his left bicep represents some of his family's heritage.

Like Travis and Waldon, Nero also said he may get another tattoo.

"I can't believe it. I haven't gotten another one yet, but I'm going to soon," Nero said. "It's going to be a Hawaiian fagging (traditional) tattoo on my arm."

When Sade Neser was 18, the now 20-year-old senior interdisciplinary studies major went with her mother to have a tattoo of a hibiscus flower and a hummingbird inked her left shoulder.

"Hibiscus and hummingbirds are my favorite flowers and the birds are always flying around in Trinidad," said Neser, a Trinidad native.

"They are small and quick little birds, and I am small and quick. I became friends with a tattoo artist on Facebook," Neser said.

Neser also has a tattoo of a fish with lilies on her calf and a smaller tattoo of roses on her lower back, which she got when she was 18 years old.

Neser said she was surprised to find out that tattoos have become a more acceptable form of expression for everyone thanks to reality shows about tattoo artists.

"I kind of think about changing my get-up and if it was still going to make them or not when you are older," Neser said.

"I really want another, but I don't like the pain," Waldon said.
